Salvadoran's activism is still strong

BY JOEL ARNOLD

STAFF WRITER

Nelson Lazo, an exiled native of El Salvador, has mellowed in his actions somewhat since he helped overrun a Honduran consulate's Chicago office in 1982. But he is still determined to see the establishment of a peaceful democracy in his home country.

The 38-year-old Lazo is the founder of Casa El Salvador, a local group which supports El Salvador's rebel Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN). Casa El Salvador is responsible for many of the local lectures and programs designed to raise awareness of the political situation in El Salvador. The group has also organized benefits which have raised $15,000 for relief groups in that country, including $1,000 for the construction of three health clinics. Lazo plans to return to El Salvador this summer to continue working for

Pols predict compromise on taxes; higher ed will skim by

BY GLEN TORBERT

ASST. NEWS EDITOR

A compromise between "no new taxes" and Gov. Lawton Chiles' "Fair Share" budget plan is expected in the Legislature's special session, according to legislative and higher education officials, and education will fare best among entities receiving state money.

But after two consecutive years of higher education budget cuts, the big dispute is whether a compromise will generate enough money for the university system to adequately function.

The showdown begins when the Legislature convenes today, as many Republicans, who have announced they cannot accept a tax increase during a recession, battle Chiles and his supporters.

Chiles' Fair Share Tax Plan calls for $1.35 billion in new tax money for the second half of this year and $2.5 billion yearly.

The two local state congressmen, Rep. Hurley Rudd and Rep. Al Lawson, both predicted the House would go along with a compromise.

"I think the House—and again, this is just what I think—I think the House would pass some sort of taxation," Rudd said last week.

Lawson went further, saying many House members were simply out to do what's politically expedient, rather than what's best for the state of Florida.

"I believe that the House will pass an appropriations package that will not take care of all the needs of Florida, but put a Band-Aid on things until they get re-elected," Lawson said Thursday.

The Senate is the likely sticking ground for any compromise. Though the Democrats hold a 21-19 majority in the Senate, one of the Democrats, Sen. Sherry Walker, has come out against any sort of tax increase. Walker did not return several calls to her office last week.

Democrat Sen. Pat Thomas said it would take some time before any kind of compromise is worked out, but that people would eventually shift toward supporting new taxes.

Session sickness: No chance for a 'fair share' in this state of affairs

BY D.K. ROBERTS

SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

What is wrong with us in Florida that our greed and our selfishness outweigh the crying and evident needs of the state?

Do we really think we pay too much in taxes? Do we really think that universities and schools and children and the old and the sick and the poor and the homeless get too much money from us? Do we really think Big Government is the problem? Are we so abysmally stupid?

According to the latest Mason-Dixon poll, the answer seems to be yes. Over two-thirds of the people of Florida are convinced that the state has plenty of money. In fact, most Floridians think that things are just fine.

Maybe aliens have stolen our brains, maybe we have all taken Dan Quayle stupid pills. I don't know. But this is crazy and it doesn't look like it will get saner any time soon.

Beginning today, the Florida Legislature meets to thrash out some sort of budget deal. It will be

NEA president urges prioritizing education; bashes Bush

BY BEN RHODES

FLAMBEAU WRITER

With Florida's public schools enrolling 80,000 more students while employing 8,000 fewer teachers this year, the state is a perfect example of how government is just not interested in making education a top priority, according to National Education Association President Keith Geiger.

"It follows that if we are to improve America's schools, we must begin by shifting America's priorities," Geiger told a crowd of 150 at a luncheon Friday afternoon.

Speaking to members of the Tallahassee Tiger Bay Club, Geiger stressed the importance of investing in America's education, calling for a nationwide shift in political interests.

Geiger cited education budget cuts across the nation that have resulted in teacher layoffs, overcrowded classes and shortages of even the most basic supplies.

"The question people ought to be asking is not 'why aren't our schools doing better?' but, 'How are our schools managing to do so well?'" he said.

Geiger

It costs $5,500 a year to educate each child or $1 billion a day to educate all the kids in America. If priorities are shifted, the funds will be there, he argues. He pointed out that it cost the U.S. $1 billion a day to wage operation Desert Storm.

"Look at it this way," Geiger reasons. "When Saddam Hussein threatened America's vital interests in the Persian Gulf, no one asked, 'Can America afford to go to war?'"

Now that the Cold War is over, said Geiger, and in view of the astonishing fashion with which the U.S. dismantled the fourth largest military might in the world, the time is ripe for a shift from military spending to domestic programs that will secure America's future.

"The United States is the world's undisputed military superpower," Geiger told the audience. "But we are no longer the world's undisputed economic power."

With one quarter of America's youth growing up in poverty and one out of every two African-American children living under dismal conditions, Geiger insists Americans must begin by investing in children at an early age. This includes Headstart programs and improved health care.

"A dollar spent on a kid at age three will save five at age 15 or 16. There ought not be a kindergarten, first or second grade, with more than 15 kids in it," he said.

No stranger to the classroom himself, Geiger taught middle school math and science for five years before joining the ranks of the 2 million member NEA union. After serving six years as vice president, he was elected president in July 1989.

Since accepting an appointment to President Bush's Education Policy Advisory Committee, Geiger has found himself increasingly at odds with the administration of the man who won the 1988 election proclaiming himself the "Education President".

As Bush's interests have now shifted to the desperation of America's inner cities in a bid for re-election, Geiger hopes to make clear the correlation between the education system's woes and the plight of urban youth.

"Some people say the 1980s were boom years for the U.S. economy. Try telling that to a kid whose father has just lost his job," said Geiger, resounding calls for social and economic reforms that would combine education and job programs.

If priorities aren't shifted soon, Geiger sees America losing ground in its international position. "I've talked with educators around the world and they all agree that America has the greatest higher education system in the world, without a doubt."

"Why is that?" he posed rhetorically. "It's because America invests money in higher education."

Pat Tornillo, president of the Florida Education Association agreed that more money needs to be spent in elementary and secondary education as well.

"There is no way America can get around investing more money in educational programs any longer," he said.

Senate committee rejects Belin's nominees for cabinet

BY MATT GRIMISON
STAFF WRITER

A Florida State University student senate committee rejected two of student body president Jeanne Belin's cabinet nominees and ordered two others to return for further scrutiny in what some called an attempt to undermine the president's first semester in office.

"There is no reason for the senate to fail candidates for my cabinet," Belin said Sunday. "This is an attempt to demoralize my cabinet. It doesn't hurt me as much as student body president than as a student of this university."

"Something stinks and the smell is politics," said Dannielle Sylvester, who was rejected for the post of chief of staff.

The student senate Elections and Appointments Committee rejected, along with Sylvester, the nominee for Graduate Student Advocate Cyrus Amirsehi. It "tabled" office of management and budget director nominee Corey King and public relations director Sean Sullivan. The committee will continue to discuss the nominations when it meets Monday night.

According to Sylvester, the decisions by the committee were politically motivated, noting that many senators on the committee were members of the now-defunct Seminole Party, which was defeated by Belin's Monarchy Party ticket in April.

"I think this is a poor way for the senate to serve the students," Sylvester said.

Kim Dunn, chair of the committee, said it held no hidden agenda.

"I simply don't feel it was political at all," said Dunn, adding that rejections in the committee, while not a common occurrence, have occurred in the past.

However, Dunn refused to divulge why the candidates were rejected or tabled.

Belin said the reasons were undoubtedly plain political maneuvering.

"We interviewed all the candidates and found they were the most qualified for the respective positions," said Belin. "This is not going to stop us."

Senate president Jennifer Tankersely could not be reached for comment Sunday.

Sylvester said several of the questions posed by the committee were inappropriate, such as one which asked each nominee's party affiliation. She added this proved political influence in the decisions.

Terrence Clark, who was approved by the committee and full senate for the post of legislative analyst, said the question added to tension which exists between the legislative and executive branches of student government.

"I took that question personally," said Clark, who added that around 10 percent of the committee's inquiries were not justified.

Dunn defended the questioning.

"The series was asked to every candidate and they were normal types of questions," said Dunn, adding the candidates were not obligated to answer them.

According to Sylvester, the irony of the situation is that the rejected candidates will serve in their intended posts. Belin, through executive order, simply added "deputy" to their titles, which affects only their status on payroll, not job responsibility.

At last Wednesday's senate meeting, Sylvester scolded the legislative body for its "games" and said the two branches should "work together or the students will suffer."

Weekend city robberies

Police are investigating three similar armed robberies which occurred over the weekend, Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Phil Kiracofe said Saturday.

• At 8:37 a.m. Friday, a man knifed a Suwannee Swifty store clerk and then robbed the store at 415 E. Orange Ave.

After taking the money the man left headed east on Orange Avenue on foot. He was described as a Black male, 25 to 30 years old, five feet seven inches tall and weighing about 170 pounds. He had a mustache and was wearing a lime-green, short-sleeve shirt and tan shorts.

• A robbery took place Friday evening at D & I Sporting Goods, 1400 Village Square Blvd. The suspect entered the store at about 6:50 p.m. After browsing around, he took an Atlanta Braves shirt to the counter.

The alleged robber then threatened the clerk with a small handgun and demanded money. Customers in the store did not see the gun because the suspect kept it hidden in his shirt.

The assailant left through the back door with the money and shirt. He was described as a Black man, 17 to 18 years old, five feet seven inches tall and weighing about 160 pounds. He wore a black ball cap with the Charlotte Hornets logo, a khaki shirt and navy blue knee-length shorts.

• A third robbery occurred at another southside Suwannee Swifty Store at 7:35 a.m. Saturday. The clerk reported he was kneeling behind the counter to restock bags when the suspect came walking around the counter holding a gun.

The suspect took money, cigarettes and some lottery tickets. He then ran from the store with the clerk chasing him for a short distance.

A motorist driving past the store saw the men running and followed the suspect in his car to the area of Putnam Drive and Meridian Road, where he lost sight of him.

The suspect is described as a Black male, 27, five feet nine inches tall, weighing between 160 and 170 pounds. He was wearing a white cap, dark-blue shirt and knee-length shorts.

Yet another armed robbery

Two gunmen robbed Mom and Dad's Italian Restaurant early Sunday morning after the business closed for the night, Leon County Sheriff's Office spokesperson Dick Simpson said.

The manager and an employee were exiting the west side of the building at about 12:26 a.m. when two men wielding guns chased them back inside, stole the money and then left.

Blacks more likely to face jail time, FSU study says

A new study by Florida State University criminology professor Theodore Chiricos has found that, without sentencing guidelines, employed Blacks are 5.9 times as likely as their white counterparts to face jail for drug crimes.

Chiricos studied incarceration rates for 1,480 felons and 490 misdemeanants in two Florida counties with Florida Department of Corrections Bureau Chief for Planning, Research and Statistics, William Bales. The study also found that, even for the same crime, young unemployed Blacks serve jail time more often than older unemployed Blacks or whites.

"That means that Blacks were 590 percent more likely to go to jail for the same offense as whites," Chiricos said. "It may be due in part to the equation of Blacks and drugs in the public mind. There's a notion that some categories of people are more threatening than others, which may affect their likelihood of incarceration."

Business as usual

Let's be honest about it. Even if Gov. Lawton Chiles' "Fair Share" tax plan is eventually passed by the Legislature during the special session that convenes this morning, important issues affecting Floridians such as education, social services and the environment would still not see the kind of radical fiscal restructuring they really need. Chiles' plan is good as far as it goes, but it leaves plenty of room for improvement considering the relative importance of, say, a quality university budget, the Preservation 2000 conservation program, prenatal care and numerous other issues vital to this state.

It's all the more troubling, therefore, that the best we can hope for from the session is a compromise that would see the House and Senate agree to a paltry $500 million in new taxes, far short of the $2.5 billion Chiles had hoped for with his "Fair Share" plan.

Education for example, while possibly faring the best amongst the vital social programs in need of major funding, will still barely keep its nose above water.

Why, you may ask, will the Legislature fail to pass even the Governor's "Fair Share" plan? The answer is politics as usual. Consider:

Legislators—Republicans and Democrats alike—won't pass new taxes because this is an election year. They argue that their constituencies don't want new taxes. This is a smokescreen. What these representatives don't mention is the fact that, truthfully, those taxes wouldn't hurt the majority of Floridians. It will, however, hurt those lobbyists and special interests who contribute to their campaigns. Chiles' plan would largely tax businesses and other entities that haven't been paying their fair share in taxes—in some cases for decades. It's just that these representatives know where their bread and butter is: Those same special interests that would be taxed under Chiles' plan.

In other words, and as is to be expected when a government entity is controlled by powerful special interests, Florida legislators will most likely bow down to their benefactors. This, of course, is the source of many of our problems, and Floridians should do something about it. Truth be told, many, if not most, legislators are careerists, opportunists, puppets.

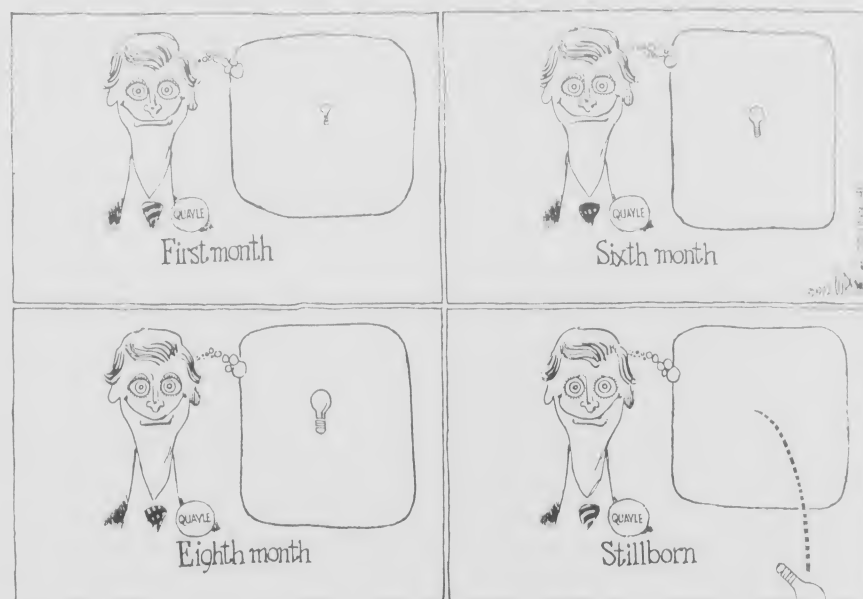

Part of the answer to this problem could lie in the September elections, when Floridians will have the opportunity to oust incumbents and replace them, hopefully, with progressive candidates without ties to big business and other special interest groups. In other words, legislators willing to act as public servants instead of career politicians.

Until then, look for more of the same in the special session.

PACIFICA Rebellions, riots becoming the norm throughout the Americas

BY ROGER BURBACH
PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

The Los Angeles riots reveal that major U.S. cities are increasingly taking on the aspects of Latin American urban societies. It's not just the racial mix of the rioters; the riots themselves fit the pattern of a string of urban upheavals that have rocked Latin America's largest cities in recent years.

Cities as divergent as Sao Paulo, Mexico City, Santo Domingo, Caracas and Guatemala City have all experienced major urban rebellions and riots in the last decade. Common factors have fomented urban unrest in at least a dozen major urban centers from Buenos Aires in the south to Los Angeles in the north.

These urban uprisings are overwhelmingly a reaction to neo-liberal economic policies and social spending cutbacks that have worsened the lot of virtually all the hemisphere's major cities. Recently released U.S. census data show that between 1980 and 1990 the plight of U.S. cities worsened dramatically. While Reaganomics and supply side economics increased the wealth of the upper classes living in the suburbs, the budgets of the cities were slashed and the standard of living in those cities dropped precipitously.

This same growth in poverty and income disparities has occurred in the major Latin American cities. In the early 1980s the Reagan administration began imposing neo-liberal austerity policies internationally, particularly through the International Monetary Fund (IMF). Hardly a country in Latin America was untouched as governments slashed social spending programs in education and health care, and state spending on public transportation as well as basic food subsidies was ended or curtailed. The IMF often insisted that inefficient industries be shut down—in particular those that could not compete with multinational corporations—thereby increasing unemployment in urban areas.

One of the earliest upheavals occurred in Santo Domingo in 1984, when the government doubled prices on imports as well as domestic foodstuffs and people took to the streets in protest. Gangs of youth set up barricades of burning tires and pelted police with stones.

Stores were looted, and even though the military was sent in, the riots continued for almost a week. The riots claimed 650 lives, hundreds were injured, and thousands were arrested.

In 1985 Guatemala City erupted due to hikes in bus fares and the prices of bread and milk. Riots in Buenos Aires shut down the city several times between 1983 and 1985.

While trade unions, leftist political parties and even churches often initiated the protests against austerity policies, these organizations quickly lost control as people rampaged through the streets and stores were sacked and burned.

This dynamic was also apparent in urban disorders in cities like Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, which began as political protests but grew violent as people from the slums moved in to loot food stores and to confront the police and military. Protests in the mid-1980s in Santiago, Chile and Port au Prince, Haiti similarly turned violent as people from the most marginalized barrios vented their anger and despair. The disorders led to the eventual downfall of Augusto Pinochet in Chile and "Baby Doc" Duvalier in Haiti.

While dramatically worsened economic conditions provided fuel for these urban upheavals, the spark was often a furious response to repressive authority. In Los Angeles, that authority was the local police; elsewhere it was the military. Moreover, in the early stages of the uprisings, the police and military authorities were often momentarily stunned, paralyzed and forced to withdraw by the hatred, anger and fury of the demonstrators.

These urban rebellions also display a growing popular alienation from all established authority, be it elected or militarily imposed. The urban riots in Caracas in February 1989 were particularly revealing in this regard. A month earlier, Carlos Andres Perez, a Social Democrat, had won office on a platform of opposition to IMF policies.

Once in power, however, he imposed cutbacks in state and social spending and raised prices on basic food stuffs. The result was an upheaval in Caracas as tens of thousands took to the streets. Five days of looting and clashes ensued in which at least 247 people were killed.

This sense of betrayal by the established politicians explains why large sectors of the populace of Venezuela have been generally supportive of the military coup attempt earlier this year by a group of young officers. Although Venezuela has the longest uninterrupted democratic rule of any country in South America, the Venezuelan people have had enough of civilian politicians who make election promises and then abandon them while enriching themselves at the expense of the rest of the country.

Upheavals such as those in Los Angeles and Caracas are the most recent and dramatic signs of a growing discontent by urban peoples in both hemispheres with the politicians and political systems that are impoverishing and repressing large sectors of their populations. In the process a new and rebellious urban underclass is emerging throughout the Americas.

Site near FSU and FAMU is slated for an Amtrak train station

BY DON BOWMER

STAFF WRITER

If that long Greyhound ride back from Mardi Gras last year tightened the noose on your hung-over head, Amtrak wants to be the aspirin for your headache.

Florida State and Florida A&M University students will soon be within walking distance from the new Amtrak station, scheduled to open October 28. Tallahassee, along with several other cities between Jacksonville and New Orleans, will be part of the final link in what will be the first regularly scheduled cross-continental passenger train between Miami and Los Angeles.

"We're gonna really push the weekend escape to New Orleans," said Amtrak spokesperson Howard Robertson. "You can leave late Friday night, spend Saturday night on Bourbon Street, Sunday afternoon at the Saints game, and be back in time for class Monday morning."

Two weeks ago city and county commissioners agreed to revamp the old freight station located on Railroad Avenue one block north of the FAMU campus and four blocks south of FSU. The depot will include a restaurant, travel agency, automobile rental, and a variety of other shops.

According to Robertson, Amtrak is planning to offer the roundtrip ticket between Tallahassee and New Orleans for $100. Currently a roundtrip bus ticket on Greyhound costs $129.

Robertson said Amtrak's passenger trains offer lounge, dining, and sleeper cars, and students can save money by sleeping on the train Friday and Sunday night for the 12-hour trip.

"We pull out of Tallahassee 15 minutes after last call on Friday, and we leave New Orleans at 8:40 Sunday night, leaving plenty of time to get back from the game," Robertson said.

Michael Thompson, an FSU senior, is planning to try out the Tallahassee to New Orleans service as soon as it becomes available.

"I thoroughly oppose drinking and driving," Thompson said. "So I plan to let Amtrak do the driving, and I'll handle the drinking."

"In the past, when I've traveled by train, I've always met a lot of interesting people from all over the world," Thompson added.

At this time travelers from Miami have to ride north to Washington D.C., before turning south and to New Orleans. The Jacksonville to New Orleans connection will slice more than two days off present travel time. In addition, by upgrading existing rails, Amtrak will be able to increase the train speed to as fast as 79 miles per hour in certain designated rural areas.

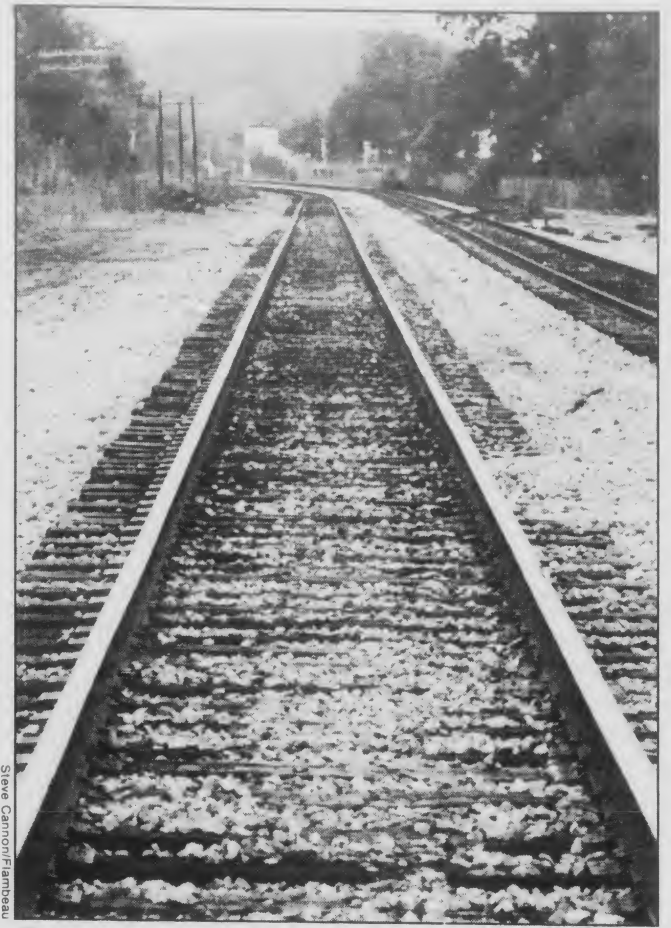

Other Florida stops on the new leg between Jacksonville and New Orleans are Madison and Lake City east of Tallahassee, and Chipley, Crestville, and Pensacola to the west.

According to Joe Summers of the Environmental Protection Agency, Amtrak's diesel powered trains are the most environmentally conscious form of mass transportation available.

"Diesel engines are cleaner than combustion engines," Summers said. "If you take a large group of people out of their cars and put them together in one transportation unit, you can see it would be a large reduction in pollutants."

Roderick Stovall, FAMU's student body president, said the economic advantages will benefit students who would prefer not to fly.

"I know there are a lot of people who are nervous about flying. This will give them an economical option," Stovall said. "Besides, I grew up using Atlanta's rapid transit system and trains are a lot of fun."

FSU gets big catch in Gor'kov

BY JOEL ARNOLD

STAFF WRITER

The National High Magnetic Field Laboratory has attracted to its staff Lev Gor'kov, a past nominee of the Nobel Prize in Physics and one of Russia's leading physicists.

Florida Governor Lawton Chiles announced the appointment of the 62-year-old Gor'kov at a press conference Tuesday, where he praised the 1966 winner of the Lenin Award for Physics, Russia's most prestigious science award.

"Dr. Gor'kov is going to give Florida the best theoretical group in the country and maybe the world," Chiles said. "Gor'kov's leadership will help create the preeminent laboratory for research."

The Magnetic Lab, a joint project of Florida State University, the University of Florida and Arizona's Los Alamos National Laboratory, will house the most powerful magnets ever built when construction is completed next year.

Gor'kov

Gor'kov said the lab, which will lead to research that can later be applied to areas such as magnetic transportation, is an exciting opportunity for him.

"This is just revolutionary in everything," Gor'kov said. "Nowhere can you collect such an amount of commitment and such good facilities."

Gor'kov will join the FSU and UF faculties this June at an annual salary of $154,000. He has undertaken pioneering theoretical research that has led to breakthroughs in the application of superconductivity—the flow of electricity through a material without resistance—to technologies such as magnetic imaging of human tissues and magnetic levitation transportation.

SGs stage King forum

FROM STAFF REPORTS

In the wake of the verdict in the Rodney King beating case and the subsequent rioting in Los Angeles, the student body presidents of Florida A&M University and Florida State University have come up with a way to air local opinions that they hope will ease local tensions.

A public discussion on "Justice in America: the Rodney King Verdict" will be held Tuesday from 7-9 p.m. in room 123-B of the Center for Professional Development at 555 West Pensacola St.

Moderated by FAMU Student Body President Roderick Stovall, the discussion will include representatives from local law enforcement and state human services agencies.

The public is invited and encouraged to express their opinions during the discussion, which will be jointly sponsored by FSU and FAMU student governments.

For more information, call FAMU student government at 599-3624 extension 109, or FSU student government at 644-1811.

House could choose President

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

WASHINGTON—While saying it is an unlikely prospect, congressional leaders are beginning to confront the possibility that the House may have to choose the winner of this year's presidential race.

Twice before in the nation's history, the House has had to elect the president, but it has not happened since early last century when Thomas Jefferson was chosen in 1801 and John Quincy Adams in 1825.

This unusual event is considered a possibility this year because the presidential election may not produce a clear-cut victory for George Bush, Bill Clinton, or Ross Perot.

The 12th Amendment to the Constitution says that if no person receives a majority of votes in the electoral college, then "the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the president."

And the Senate is directed to choose the vice president.

If this responsibility does again fall to Congress, it will be a dramatic and fascinating event, but also a potential political minefield that will have to be traversed with great caution.

Probably the most striking aspect of the process is that each of the 50 states would have just one vote in the House. Thus small or lightly populated states such as Rhode Island and North Dakota would be the equals of California and Texas in selecting the new president.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., doubts the situation will arise, calling it an "outside possibility." Clearly, he hopes it will not.

"I am not for the 12th Amendment as a method of choosing the American president," Foley said recently

Terrorists may hit summit

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

SAO PAULO, Brazil—Interpol is investigating reports that a terrorist group plans to attack the Israeli Consulate in Rio de Janeiro during the Earth Summit, an Interpol official said Sunday in a newspaper interview.

Romeu Tuma Jr., chief of Interpol's Sao Paulo office, told the Folha de Sao Paulo newspaper that he received information last week that a terrorist group would attempt an attack during the 11-day United Nations conference, which begins Wednesday in Rio de Janeiro.

"We are exchanging information with the police from all over the world to find out what is happening," Tuma said in the interview.

Tuma, who is working on the case with Brazilian federal police, would not identify the organization suspected of plotting an attack but the Folha de Sao Paulo reported that the eight-person group is believed to be linked to Abu Nidal, a Mideast paramilitary leader who is widely wanted on terrorism charges.

Interpol was informed that the group would attempt to attack the Israeli Consulate in Rio de Janeiro and a conference of Israeli women who will meet in a hotel during the U.N. conference.

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Belgrade, Yugoslavia—Serbian leaders remained defiant Sunday in the face of sweeping sanctions imposed by the U.N. Security Council, refusing to relinquish territory captured in Bosnia-Herzegovina and indicating they were prepared to circumvent international embargoes on trade and oil sales.

The U.N. Security Council's decision Saturday was praised by Bosnia-Herzegovina's Muslim Slav president, Alija Izetbegovic, who told Sarajevo radio and television: "The U.N. resolution has shown that we are not alone."

Johannesburg, South Africa—South Africa's leading black political movement, the African National Congress (ANC), approved an unprecedented campaign of mass action Sunday in a bid to force the transfer of power from the ruling white minority.

The ANC said the government had until July to meet its demands or face strikes, demonstrations and other unspecified protests.

"If the government does not cooperate, they must be prepared for turmoil in this country," said ANC president Nelson Mandela. "That is the lesson of history. That this is the lesson of this country."

The ANC said that unless the ruling National Party meets the July deadline confrontation is the only way to break the deadlock in negotiations with the government and speed up the transfer of power to the country's disenfranchised black majority.

Arica, Chile—An emergency building operation was under way in the deserts and mountains of northern Chile Sunday after three days of high winds, rain and snow swept away makeshift homes and left 20,000 homeless, officials said.

An estimated 3,000 homes were damaged, roads were cut and large mining operations shut down along a 780 mile strip running through the Andes Mountains and the northern deserts, officials said. Many of the homes in the area are built of cardboard and scrap lumber, officials said.

New Delhi, India—Twenty-one diners were killed Sunday when a gas explosion sent flames racing through a restaurant in the western port city of Bombay, the press Trust of India news agency reported.

Most of the victims were tourists from the southern Indian state of Tamil Nadu who had just arrived in Bombay after a tour of Northern India, the news agency said.

Norfolk, Va.—Five naval officers face a preliminary hearing Monday before a Navy investigator on claims they sexually assaulted a woman hired to dance at a fellow flier's bachelor party, a published report said Sunday.

"The Navy is extremely spun up over this," The Virginian-Pilot and the Ledger-Star quoted one unidentified Navy official familiar with the investigation. "Well, heads are going to roll and at high offices."

The Marine Corps is investigating a sixth officer for the same alleged offenses, the newspaper reported.

The case is the latest in which Navy men have been accused of harassing or abusing women. The newspaper reported that the case has the attention of every senior officer up the chain of command, including the chief of naval operations at the Pentagon.

Washington—President Bush, facing criticism for his environmental record as the U.N. Earth Summit approaches, will unveil a major global forest conservation initiative Monday, the chief of the Environmental Protection Agency said Sunday.

William Reilly, administrator of the EPA, said President Bush's forestry initiative would devote more than $100 million annually to support global conservation and the wise use of the world's forests.

Sacramento, Calif.—California, the only state with both U.S. Senate seats open this year, will elect nominees Tuesday from a field that features a nationally watched GOP duel and two dynamic Democratic women battling to enlarge female ranks in the male-dominated Senate.

Rep. Barbara Boxer and former San Francisco mayor Dianne Feinstein are among 19 women across the country running for the Senate, which has 98 men and two women.

Washington—Most drug advertisements published in medical journals fail to comply with government standards and many are misleading, a study said Sunday.

Subjecting 109 full-page or larger drug ads to the same scrutiny that research articles face, researchers concluded that manufacturers incorrectly claimed their product was the "drug of choice" for a particular condition, made improper comparisons with other drugs or put forth inaccuracies or misleading statements.

Pro- and anti-tax rallies are set for today

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Whether you support Gov. Lawton Chiles' "Fair Share" tax plan or oppose a tax increase, there's a rally for you today.

This morning, the Republican Party of Florida will hold a protest against Chiles' tax plan. It starts around 10:30 a.m. at the Tallahassee-Leon County Civic Center.

Around 10:45 the ralliers will walk to the Old Capitol Plaza. By 11 a.m. the speakers—party officials, owners of small businesses and citizens—will take turns at the microphone.

Protestors are supposed to bring tea bags, recalling the Boston Tea Party of 1773.

In the afternoon, Chiles' office and the Coalition for Florida's Future, a confederation of several government entities who get money from the state budget, have their own rally planned in support of Chiles' tax plan.

Supporters will gather at the Governor's mansion at 5 p.m. At 5:30, the crowd will march to the Capitol. Chiles will give live television interviews at 6 p.m. for the local news broadcasts.

"When you start talking about human needs, it becomes more of an artistic effort, easier to follow and see," Thomas said Friday in a telephone interview from his office in Quincy.

"It takes time for change and he's an agent of change," Thomas said of Chiles. "I think he is generating a lot of support from the media, classroom teachers, businesses. . . ."

Florida Student Association Executive Director Scott Jenkins was critical of the entire system.

"It's really embarrassing to watch the process right now. They care about their political policy more than they care about the state of Florida," he said Friday in a phone interview from Lansing, Mich.

Education: The Sacred Cow

A compromise would probably generate some $500 million in new revenue, with at least $30 million of that going to higher education, officials say.

Legislators and educators agree the university system will fare better than social services and the criminal justice system for a variety of reasons.

"We are the engine of upward mobility," Board of Regents spokesperson Pat Riordan said. "Everyone wants there to be a university system for their kids."

"I know that we certainly need the increased dollars pegged for education," Florida A&M University President Frederick Humphries said last week. "I think the future of the state depends on the education our students receive."

Legislators are generally more pragmatic in explaining their support for education.

"I think education will be the lead dog. It will pull the pack," Thomas said. "It's hard to sell prisons. People don't like them. They have no alumni association."

Lawson said education is the Legislature's No. 1 priority, topping out welfare, prisons and the like.

"I think that education is probably going to fare better than any of them because at least when you talk to everyone, they have some sense of responsibility for the kids," Lawson said.

The disagreement comes in whether the compromise works. Many legislators and educators are unhappy with the prospect of $500 million in new taxes. Supporters of Chiles say it's not anywhere close to enough money, while those opposed to a tax increase are unhappy even with less of an increase.

"If we could get four or five hundred million dollars, we could bring education back to where it was," Rudd said.

But Riordan said getting back just isn't adequate. "We'd get out of the hole, we'd prevent further damage," he said. "(But) 30 to 50 million dollars in new money . . . is nothing."

Lawson, speaking about the whole budget, agreed. "Even a $1 billion (tax plan) is a Band-Aid approach," he said. "Hey, 300 to 500 million dollars will only last until December."

FSA's Jenkins said that as Florida's population increases, more and more tax money will get eaten up by Medicare and other entitlement programs in which anyone legally qualifying for money gets it.

"The university system will continue to decline because we're not going to get any new money," he said.

Riordan summed it up by saying the Legislature can't straddle the fence when deciding on a tax plan.

"What we're trying to convince the Legislature is, if you're going to raise taxes, raise them high enough to do some good," he said.

messy, petty, frustrating, dim, dumb and cowardly. After all, it is an election year. The legislators can't afford to look like people who might accept the fact that Florida's tax base is as thin as Saran Wrap. They have to thump and bluster and pander to the perceived selfishness of their constituents. They can't possibly tell the truth—truth is bad politics.

Gov. Lawton Chiles has a budget he calls the "Fair Share" plan, $2.5 billion to begin to properly fund education, the environment, prisons, roads, health care and the disadvantaged in Florida. The extra money comes from removing certain exemptions from sales tax on legal fees, advertising and services like pool cleaning and dry cleaning. The plan even has a tax cut—the sales tax would be reduced statewide from a minimum six percent to five percent. And property taxes on homes worth less than $150,000 would be cut in half—both are progressive moves benefitting middle and lower-income people.

The services sales tax is the best idea ex-Gov. Bob Martinez ever chickened out of. Back when it was first proposed, even Republicans thought they liked it. Then they (and everybody else) lost their nerve when the advertising lobby and the legal lobby and several other powerful cabals put big bucks and political pressure into getting it scrapped. And it got scrapped, contributing to the "revenue shortfall" pit Florida finds itself mired in today.

We seem to have lost the sense that a society is made up of people contributing to its smooth and humane running. We ought to care about education, even if we went to school in Michigan or paid our children's tuition in New York. We ought to care about the homeless even if we own a house in Killearn or Highgrove. We ought to care about the sick even if we are healthy. We ought to care about the old even if we are young. We ought to care about the environment even if we live in downtown Miami. We ought to have the imagination and generosity to see that we cannot simply live for our own gain to the exclusion of everyone else.

But then, we don't have very good examples in the government. Many Florida legislators are obviously interested only in getting re-elected. Legislative leaders are prepared to go up to $300-$500 million in new revenue. It sounds like a lot. But it isn't.

There is much posturing. The Republicans are calling for people to brandish tea bags in a pathetic reference to the Boston Tea Party. Some Democrats (like local Senator Sherry Walker) are refusing to listen to the logic of Chiles' plan because they say it isn't necessary. Others, like Rep. Tim Ireland, R-Cape Coral, are at least honest. He was quoted in the Tallahassee Democrat saying "everyone has to run for re-election. It may be immaterial to one-term Lawton, but it's not to the rest of us."

There you have it, the truth about politics. Government exists to continue to exist. Government helps those who don't need any help (the under-taxed, overindulged wealthy of the state) and ignores everyone else. Without Chiles' extra money, over 20,000 students in Florida will be denied entrance to a university or community college, low-income pregnant women will get no prenatal care, and health care to poor children will be discontinued. Among other things. That's the real bottom line. If we don't care about education, the environment, the poor, the old, why don't we just say so? Why not stop pretending?

But then, Florida is built on pretending. Like politics.

democracy in his country after a five-year exile in the United States.

Lazo said the recent United Nations' brokered peace treaty that is supposed to end the bloody 12-year-old civil war between the Alfredo Christiani government and the FMLN is too fragile to take for granted.

"The government doesn't want to do it 100 percent," Lazo said last week, referring to the slow demobilization of the government's security forces. "This moment is very dangerous, but we've got to keep pushing for the government to comply with the agreement."

Although he has not been an official member of the FMLN, Lazo said he has been involved in the struggle to overthrow the Salvadoran oligarchy and its government since he was 20 years old.

Lazo said he joined the revolution because of the dire economic straits of much of El Salvador's population, including his own family.

"I started to get more conscientious," Lazo said in a heavy Salvadoran accent. "It's normal to be poor, but little by little you see that this is not right, that we have to do something."

Although he dropped out of the seventh grade when he was 16, he became involved in worker unionization activities at a time when teachers, students and other segments of the population were strengthening their unions. But after an altercation with a member of the national guard in 1976, he became fearful for his life and fled the country.

It was during his exile, which lasted until 1984, that the country's civil war broke out, taking more than 72,000 lives. Although he was not in El Salvador, he remained involved with the revolutionary cause, helping found a pro-FMLN group in Chicago and taking part in demonstrations against U.S. military funding of the Salvadoran government.

Lazo said a highlight of his exile occurred when he and a half dozen other activists briefly took over the Honduran consulate's office in 1982. Their action, cheered on by approximately 50 supporters outside, was in retaliation for the Salvadoran government's arrest of an FMLN leader.

"We made big news, you know," Lazo said.

He added that the group placed a call to Honduras to protest the arrest before police arrived to break up the demonstration.

In 1984 Lazo returned to Central America, where he spent a year picking coffee with the communist Sandinistas in Nicaragua to raise money for that insurgency. He also provided security for nurses tending some of the casualties of Nicaragua's civil war.

In 1985, he returned to an El Salvadoran village where he had once lived. He and his family witnessed first-hand the devastation wrought by the war.

"They were there for the first time in 10 years and they cried," he said. "Their house was destroyed. Only the front wall was up. Only five or six houses are (left) in town."

In light of this destruction, which he said occurred all over the country, Lazo resumed his political activities.

In addition to providing security, sometimes armed, for the nurses tending wounded civilians and FMLN soldiers, Lazo resumed his unionization work for one of the largest unions in El Salvador.

Although he tried to keep his activities secret, he said he lost several jobs as a result of bosses who feared retaliation from the government. With that, and his work in Nicaragua, he had once again attracted the attention of the government, forcing him into exile again in 1987.

"The death squad was looking for me," he said. "I didn't want to put my mother and the rest of my family in danger."

After leaving El Salvador with his cousin and two other friends, Lazo spent four months in Texas before heading to Tallahassee, where he founded Casa El Salvador. Working with other local activist groups such as Veterans for Peace and Florida State University's Center for Participant Education, Lazo's group has spotlighted the plight of the Salvadoran people by sponsoring lectures and benefits.

Despite his accomplishments in the United States, Lazo said he will return to El Salvador this summer, after a July fundraiser for the clinics, to help the country move toward democracy.

"Now we have to do the job openly, not clandestinely," Lazo said. "We're taking a risk to do this, but we got to do it. It's very important for us."

Although military action can't be ruled out, Lazo said, he wants change to be brought about peacefully. One such effort Lazo looks forward to is a truck convoy that will travel the United States next spring to cities like Tallahassee, collecting materials to help rebuild war-torn El Salvador.

"We have to understand the people and give humanitarian aid," he said.

Embezzle from page 1

Browning was arrested two weeks ago for allegedly embezzling between $220,000 and $230,000 while his Tallahassee management firm, College Housing Management, was under contract by the TCC Foundation to oversee Eagleview Apartments at 770 Appleyard Drive.

"Their company started managing the complex in August of 1990 and this matter came to light about a year later, in August of 1991," said Mark Mustian, an attorney for the TCC Foundation Board of Directors.

Mustian said Browning was fired last October and the State

'I discovered it about eight or nine months ago and it has taken until now for the wheels of justice to catch up with him.'

—Stuart Abbey

Attorney's office has been investigating the case since then. He said the foundation is waiting for the criminal case to proceed before the foundation decides on a civil suit.

State Attorney Willie Meggs wouldn't answer any questions

Sunday about the Browning case. Meggs wouldn't say when Browning turned himself in, who he surrendered to, or what he was charged with.

Despite the amount of money stolen, Mustian said Eagleview is not in any imminent financial danger and the foundation hopes to recover the money in the civil suit.

"This doesn't jeopardize the Eagleview project," said Mustian. "We are working at full capacity and the complex shouldn't feel any ill effects."

Stuart Abbey, a member of the TCC Foundation, uncovered the alleged mismanagement of funds.

"I discovered it about eight or nine months ago and it has taken until now for the wheels of justice to catch up with him," Abbey said Sunday.

Davis goes the distance in FSU win

BY RICH MCCRARY

STAFF WRITER

OMAHA, Neb.—If the Florida State baseball team had any ideas of staying in Omaha for a few more days, it needed a strong effort from lefty Tim Davis on Sunday.

The Seminoles got it. Davis pitched a complete game, scattering eight hits and escaping several jams as FSU hung on to defeat California 5-4 in a College World Series elimination game.

"It's been a long time since we've had a smile on our face here," FSU coach Mike Martin said. "We beat a very good California team today and the left arm of Timmy Davis was the difference."

Davis got off to a rocky start when Golden Bear first baseman Jon Zuber hit an opposite field home run, giving Cal a 1-0 lead. Davis then settled down, not allowing another hit until Zuber singled in the sixth inning.

Meanwhile, the Seminole bats finally woke up as they manufactured single runs in the second and third innings. Florida State shortstop Link Jarrett knocked in Tony Liebsack with a ground-out in the second and Liebsack singled in right fielder Chris Brock in the third.

The turning point of the game may have come in the fifth inning when FSU put runners on second and third with no outs and the heart of the order coming up. However, designated hitter Kenny Felder and left fielder Chris Roberts popped out weakly in the infield.

"That was the first time in five years that I can remember being angry at our team," Martin said.

FSU center fielder Ty Mueller changed that in a hurry when he took Golden Bear starter Brad Brown deep over the left-center field wall to give FSU a 5-1 lead.

"That was the key for us," Martin said. "Some of our past teams couldn't have overcome those two pop-outs but this team has more composure than any team I've ever had here."

The Golden Bears kept the game close with a run in the seventh inning. They then scored a run in the eighth inning and had the bases loaded with two outs. However, Davis escaped the jam when Cal catcher Dan Trump lined hard to right field to end the inning.

Davis began the ninth inning by giving up a home run to second baseman Chris Clapinski, making the score 5-4.

"At that point we thought we had the game won," Cal coach Bob Milano said. "But Davis hung in there and we give him a lot of credit."

Mueller homered vs. Cal

Steve Cannon/Flambeau

In all, Davis struck out nine while throwing an exhausting 164 pitches.

"I was getting a little tired in the eighth and ninth innings," Davis said. "But I didn't want to come out of the game so I buckled down and tried even harder."

The Seminoles will face the University of Miami Tuesday. Coach Ron Fraser's Hurricanes beat Cal State-Fullerton 4-3 Sunday night. Left-hander Roberts will get the start for Florida State against UM.

"Hopefully this will work out like the regional," Mueller said. "We lost our first game but maybe we can put another winning streak together."

(Ex) Rebel Jerry Tarkanian signs new book at local club

BY BEN RHODES

FLAMBEAU WRITER

Jerry Tarkanian, former basketball coach of the University of Nevada-Las Vegas Runnin' Rebels, was in Tallahassee Sunday signing copies of his new book Shark Attack.

Although he's famous for gnawing on towels during tense game situations, Tarkanian spent two hours chewing the fat with local basketball fans instead.

Tarkanian resigned from UNLV in April amid allegations of NCAA rules violations dating back to 1977.

Jerry Tarkanian

Christine Bryan/Flambeau

"My bitterness with the NCAA will always be there because of the way I was treated," Tarkanian said Sunday. "Still, I enjoyed coaching at the college level very much."

Tarkanian's coaching days are far from over, though. He recently signed a three-year contract to take the helm of the NBA's San Antonio Spurs.

"It's gonna be tough. The rules differences I can deal with. (But) my main concern is the travel and the number of games," Tarkanian said of the transition to the pro ranks.

While in Tallahassee, the coaching legend had a chance to meet with Florida State basketball coach Pat Kennedy. They had dinner together Friday night.

Don Yaeger, who co-wrote Shark Attack, said Kennedy predicted Tarkanian would be the first coach to win a championship at both the college and pro levels.

At the signing, Tarkanian predicted good things for Florida State's basketball program as well.

"Pat's an outstanding coach," Tarkanian said. "Every year he remains, . . . FSU will finish in the top ten."

In his 19 years at UNLV, Tarkanian guided his teams to the Final Four four times, including a 1990 title-run when UNLV defeated the Duke Blue Devils 103-73.

Shark Attack focuses both on Tarkanian's career as coach of the Rebels and his infamous battles with the NCAA. He and Yaeger signed copies of the book at the Tallahassee Garden Club.

Yaeger, whose first book, Undue Process, was about what he called the NCAA's vigilante investigations, said he was contacted by Tarkanian because of his familiarity with the subject.

Services lacking for migrant workers headed to Quincy

BY JOEL ARNOLD

STAFF WRITER

QUINCY—"Tom," a husky, easygoing 46-year-old migrant farmworker who looks more like 66, recently arrived in nearby Quincy for the first time. Like thousands of other migrants Tom drifted up here after three months of picking tomatoes in South Florida.

In general, working conditions have improved for migrant workers, he said, since the days almost 40 years ago when he and his sister helped their dad pick cotton. But he said life on the migrant circuit, including Quincy, is still difficult, with few health, legal and other services offered.

"I make a living," Tom said outside of a church-run thrift store in nearby Greensboro Tuesday. "(But) there's not too many charitable deals."

Tom, like many other farmworkers, often earns less than the minimum wage, even after putting in 13 or 14 hour work days under the beating sun.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to support a family with such meager earnings. In light of this situation, volunteer efforts have slowly taken root in Quincy aiming to provide the migrant and year-round workers with at least a little help.

One such effort cranked up last month, according to Laurie McCort, a faculty member of the the Tallahassee Memorial Regional Medical Center's Family Medical Residency Program. Building on the success of a similar effort last year in nearby Greensboro, McCort said the eight-week program provides the area's approximately 5,000 farmworkers with free medical care, legal and educational services and other services Tuesday nights at the Gadsden County Public Health Unit.

McCort, one of the project's coordinators, said the "holistic" nature of the services offered through the program—which uses volunteers from several North Florida counties, including some Florida State University students—serves as a model for future relief efforts.

"You have to deal with people's needs in their entirety," McCort said Wednesday. "(The clinic) is an incredible model for the whole health system to be built on."

McCort said the clinic has been steadily attracting more and more farmworkers, from an average of 15 a night during the clinic's first week of operation to 40 presently. But she added more will need to be done in the way of long-term relief after the clinic closes later this month, such as expanding the services and hours of a federally funded clinic in Quincy that serves farmworkers.

In addition to the services the clinic provides, many farmworker families are also

Tallahassee is now the ozone detection capital of Southeast

BY DON BOWMER

STAFF WRITER

The only year-round, ground-level ozone detection device in the entire Southeast has been refurbished and began operation at the Tallahassee Airport in early May.

"This facility is expected to soon be named the official, key early warning detection site for the entire South," said Paul Duval, director of the National Weather Service's new facility Tuesday. "We began collecting data three weeks ago for this region of the country."

The facility, which will be in continuous operation and will take readings twice a day and at other sporadic times during unusual weather conditions, will provide information to be sent to the National Oceanographic Aeronautic Administration (NOAA) in Boulder, Colorado, according to Duval.

"Although this research is still fairly new, it may become vital for Florida residents in 10 or 20 years," Duval said. "We know the ozone layer is depleting in places to the North, so it is essential we begin preparing for the future here in the South."

The NOAA removed the ozone data project from the roof of the Love Building at Florida State University in 1989 in order to recalibrate the equipment, which took a year. From 1990 until April of this year, the equipment sat in Bolder because of an insufficient funds to transport and set up the facility in Tallahassee—a cost estimated at about $25,000.

But FSU meteorology professor Kevin Kloesel and FSU meteorology students and professors worked to set up the facility themselves and, as a result, were able to reduce costs to under $5,000. That expense was picked up by the

After leaving a Tallahassee night spot, a 22-year-old woman was raped outside her home early Monday morning as she tried to unlock her door in the dark, Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Annette Garrett said Tuesday.

The victim returned home from Club 506 at 2:30 a.m. She tried to enter her home when a man grabbed her from behind. The attacker covered the woman's mouth as she tried to scream.

The man then threw her to the ground and sexually battered her until an approaching car's headlights frightened him away.

The suspect was described as a 20- to 25-year-old white man, six feet tall and weighing 210-220 pounds with a stocky build.

Robber caught but accomplice not

Police arrested the robber of the Parkway BP gas station after they found him lying on the ground among bamboo Tuesday night.

According to Garrett, Lamar Don Bell robbed the store just after 9 p.m. Tuesday and an accomplice drove him away. Police followed the two suspects to the Worthington Park apartments on Magnolia Drive. The suspects then fled from the vehicle.

The gunman was caught but the accomplice escaped. The stolen cash and the gun used in the robbery were recovered. Bell, 21, was charged with armed robbery and possession of marijuana.

Embezzled money funds his companies

The man arrested for embezzling over $200,000 from a Tallahassee Community College apartment complex used the money to help finance his four companies, according to a document filed with the Leon County Court.

Palatka developer Robert Browning contracted with TCC in 1989 to build, renovate and manage the Eagleview apartment complex.

After receiving complaints from residents about unreturned deposits and discovering that the escrow account holding the deposit monies had a negative balance, a review of the accounts began, said TCC Foundation Executive Director Stuart Abbey.

"As soon as it was uncovered, Mr. Browning was fired," Abbey said.

According to the document, between February and September 1991, $208,667 had been withdrawn from the escrow account and placed in the accounts of four Browning-controlled businesses.

Browning had agreed that the Eagleview renter's security deposits be placed in a non-interest bearing escrow account under the control of Sun Bank of Orlando and remain there.

Ignoring warnings from Sun Bank, who was to control the escrow account, Browning ordered his chief financial officer Ben Maltby to transfer the accounts. Browning told Maltby that Sun Bank was mistaken or that, if things got bad and the money would have to be returned, Browning would borrow the money from his father.

Murder trial updates

Two men are set to be tried for two separate murders of local college students, according to the State Attorney's office.

• Richard Toni Robertson's trial is set for July 29. He was indicted on first-degree murder, two burglary charges, armed robbery and auto theft. Robertson is charged with the Sept. 2 slaying of Florida A&M University student Carmela Fuce.

• On August 18, former FAMU student Oswald Newbold will be tried for the shooting of FAMU student Robin Wilson. Newbold faces charges of armed battery, two counts of aggravated battery and attempted first-degree murder.

Newbold allegedly broke into Wilson's apartment last December and shot her and her roommate, Felicia Williams.

The budget cuts that have hit the university system have education officials all the way up to Chancellor Charles Reed talking about having to close branch campuses.

In response, the Florida State University Panama City Campus student government council has planned a support rally for tonight to discuss the possibility of the PC branch shutting down and what it would mean to Panama City.

"We do want to make an impression that it's a serious threat," Alisa Butler, SG Publicity Chair, said in a phone interview from Panama City.

Directors arrested as the death Knell tolls for CIDS

BY CHE ODOM
STAFF WRITER

Employees of the Florida State University's soon-to-be-closed Center for Instructional Development and Services say their jobs were put in danger by the three directors arrested Monday for attempting to use the center's employees and property to promote their own privately-owned business. Some think the program was run into the ground.

"I was asked if I wanted to work with them on a project, but I didn't think it was right," said a former employee, who did not want to be named. "I think at the end of the year they decided not to have me around anymore because of it."

According to FSU Police spokesperson Jack Handley, former CIDS Associate Director Dennis Thorp, Assistant Director Sandra Calhoun and Associate Director Jon Cramer were charged with second-degree grand theft, second-degree conspiracy to commit grand theft and a second-degree offense against computer users. They were arrested Monday and released on $10,000 bond each.

According to FSU Police records, Thorp, Calhoun and Cramer began Interactive Media Group in August 1990, a private organization designed to market instructional materials such as those developed by CIDS while all three were still employed as directors at CIDS.

After an internal audit in September 1991, FSU attorney Gerald Jaski concluded that criminal violations were evident and the case was turned over to FSU Police and the Florida Department of Law Enforcement.

Previous audits show that the center's finances had been mismanaged, which will cost FSU nearly $2 million to correct.

Cramer, Thorp and Calhoun also allegedly made unreimbursed long-distance phone calls, used FSU computers, charged airplane flights to FSU, attempted to divert projects from CIDS, used FSU employees and used university conference rooms for meetings during the normal work day—all to benefit IMG, according to court documents.

Most employees or former employees of CIDS refused to comment, but many thought there was something funny going on for a while.

"We always wondered why no new projects were coming into CIDS," said a former employee who refused to be named. "They kept the details of what they were doing a secret but everyone knew something was going on. We all heard different rumors but most figured they must have had permission to do what they were doing."

"It was kind of stupid for them to let anyone know about it," he said. "It wasn't a secret."

University employee interviews revealed that Thorp, Calhoun and Cramer unlawfully directed lower-level CIDS employees on state time to upgrade computer disks for the Employability Skills Videodiscs to enhance the marketability of the product for IMG.

IMG employee Earl Morrogh told investigators that Thorp, Calhoun and Cramer were attempting to obtain a contract to reformat a CIDS project entitled "Science Quest" for Houghlin-Mifflin Corporation. According to an affidavit filed with the FSU Police, while FSU professor George Dawson was attempting to reformat and market "Science Quest" on behalf of FSU, Thorp, Calhoun and Cramer were attempting on behalf of IMG to take the project away from FSU.

CIDS will cease to exist June 30. Twelve employees will continue to produce educational material but will be transferred to FSU's Institute of Science and Public Affairs.

Despite the recent problems, employees hold that CIDS was a worthy endeavor.

"There were a lot of good things that came out of CIDS," said Sally Butzin, an instructional designer at the Center. "We are all saddened by what's happened."

Walkathon points up hope on both sides of Palestinian/Israeli debate

BY HOLLY COOK
FLAMBEAU WRITER

Peace in the Middle East. It's a phrase overused and possibly underrated, since this crisis has been going on so long. But according to a representative of a Florida State University organization that supports the plight of Palestinians, this may be the most critical juncture in history in which negotiations could lead to an end to hostilities in the region.

"For the first time in 50 years, Palestinians and Israelis are sitting at the same table and negotiating," Teleb Salhab, a member of the FSU Coalition for Peace and Justice in Palestine, said Tuesday. "Therefore, there is an historic opportunity for peace that must not be missed."

This Saturday, Tallahassee joins 21 other cities across the United States and Canada in a walk for Peace in the Middle East. The Fourth Annual Palestine Aid Society Walkathon is a large-scale effort to raise funds to help Palestinians in Occupied Territories and Lebanon.

"The Walkathon is very important for two reasons: First, it will help raise awareness in the community about the Palestinian cause, and second, it will help raise desperately needed money for humanitarian and medical aid to the Occupied Territories and Lebanon," explained Salhab, an FSU International Affairs graduate student, whose organization is sponsoring the Walkathon along with campus and community organizations.

Rebecca Miles Doans, a faculty member of FSU's Sociology Department, concurred with Salhab, saying communication is the way to keep Israelis and Palestinians making progress.

"The only way to keep peace in the nation is with the peace talks. It can yield progress," said Doans, who spent two years in Yafo and Jordan teaching and working with the Palestinians.

Rabbi Ron Goff, director of the Hillel Jewish Student Center, agreed with the importance of the peace talks.

"Any old arguments are counterproductive to the talks," he said. "Everyone's not going to get everything. Compromise must be reached for peace, stability and security."

Although talks are underway concerning the 50-year war, Salhab said, people in the Occupied Territories and Lebanon continue to suffer from lack of adequate health care and an unemployment rate nearing 50 percent.

The area's death rate since 1987 has reached more than 1,200, with 125,000 left wounded in conflict, Salhab said. And in the Occupied Territories, things are no better today than they were 10 years ago, he added.

"Their lives are full of hardship, but there is a tremendous will to keep their goal alive and preserve tradition," Doan said.

The Palestinians' ultimate goal is justice and eventually a Palestinian state, Salhab said.

Currently, the peace talks are on hold due to an Israeli election this month.

Rabbi Goff was optimistic of the outcome of the talks.

"Depending on the outcome, there is a real possibility of change in government as a result of the elections. They could facilitate the talks," he said.

The money raised will help Palestinians expelled from Kuwait, build hospitals, provide medical facilities, rebuild homes destroyed during the war and create vocational training for women thrust into the workplace by the arrest or death of their husbands.

The Palestine Aid Society is a tax-exempt educational, cultural and fundraising organization. Efforts are underway to establish a PAS chapter in Tallahassee. For more information, contact Teleb or Rachel Salhab at 386-3589.

Saturday, a 9 a.m. rally starts things off with speeches from Doan and Scott Camile, representing the Gainesville Veterans for Peace. The Walkathon begins at 10:30 a.m. at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. At 8 p.m., a benefit will be held at FSU's Club Downunder, featuring Bloodhound and Tim Fitch.

SG spooks

There's a spectre floating around in Florida State University student government. Deceased in name only, the Florida State University Seminole Party has come back to haunt Monarchy party student body president Jeannie Belin. And, we would add, the students of FSU who voted for her.

It wasn't long ago that a "new" Monarchy party ticket with Belin and sports star running mate Charlie Ward handily defeated the Seminole Party ticket.

Then the Seminole Party, known for its childlike and underhanded campaign tactics, promptly disbanded and blamed their lack of popularity among FSU students on "bad press" (Read: Flambeau as Seminole Party scapegoat, complete with a pitiful, whiny 11th-hour resolution condemning the paper).

But former members effectively reared the party's ugly head Wednesday when a senate committee weighted with former Seminole Party members rejected two of Belin's cabinet nominees and ordered two more to come back to undergo more questioning. In a stunning display of arrogance, they asked nominees outright about their political affiliations.

This raises the question: Are the nominees' civil rights being violated? The last we checked, the U.S. constitution protects an individual from being judged by government officials for his or her political ideas and affiliations when applying for jobs. The answer would seem to be yes, the nominees' rights were violated by the grand inquisitors on the senate committee.

Aside from the illegality of the move, this is a classic case of political hardball, petty politics at its worst. And students, who after all pay for it all, shouldn't tolerate it.

What does the committee expect to result from this? Will they reject every nominee Belin comes up with? Maybe they expect her to nominate former Seminole Party members. It wouldn't be beyond the vanity of these people.

Meanwhile, the more Belin's nominees are rejected, the more Florida State University students will suffer. It's time for former Seminole Party members to respect the will of the students who voted for Belin and Ward and let those interested pursue efforts to represent FSU students. It's time for them to throw in the towel on their adolescent antics.

Green alternative

The fruits of the 5th annual Florida Greens conference held near Orlando this past weekend may come to bear soon.

The environmental party, which recently won political party status in Florida and whose platform provides refreshing positions on environmental, economic and social justice issues, has chosen to run a candidate against an as yet unnamed Congressional Democrat from Florida.

The Democrat will be named next month, but an analysis has revealed that this representative—an incumbent whose positions on green issues rank the worst of all the Florida representatives—would inflict more harm on the environment than the worst Florida Republican.

Look for the Greens to either: One, oust the said Democrat or, two, at the very least cause future Democrats to reassess their campaign agendas.

Meanwhile, Leon County residents tired of politics as usual can support the local Greens, who stress not only sane, sincere political ideas, but institutional reform as well. Tallahasseeans can now stop by the Leon County Supervisor of Elections Office at the Courthouse and change their party affiliation to "Green." They can also sign the Greens' ballot access petition that would increase the number of state and local seats for which the party can run candidates.

The Greens can make a difference. Give them a chance.

Chinese demonstrators not forgotten

Editor:

Three years ago today, the Chinese government carried out a bloody suppression of the surging democratic movement in Beijing.

This movement, which was launched by students striving for democracy and freedom, obtained extensive support from millions of Beijing civilians. The demonstrators used a peaceful way to protest against the Chinese tyranny. Their passion, their spirit of selflessness and their fearless courage have won respect, solicitude and sympathy all over the world.

The 1989 democratic movement will be recorded in both Chinese history and human history. The Chinese people and the people all over the world will not forget this unparalleled tragedy in human history and will remember the heroes who devoted their blood and lives to the cause of China's democracy.

The "June 4th" massacre has made the Chinese people see clearly the cruel, tyrannic nature of the Chinese government. The fact that the Chinese tyrants fired on innocent demonstrators has completely shattered the fantasy of the Chinese people of their government. At the same time, the government's tyrannic behavior has indicated that the current government is getting weak and crumbling.

Great changes have taken place in several communist countries in East Europe and the Soviet Union since the end of 1989. Although these changes were not directly caused by the 1989 Beijing democratic movement, it is certain that people in these countries got courage from the Chinese people. The collapse of East European communist tyrannies and the disintegration of the Soviet Union have made us realize that to strive for democracy and freedom is an irresistible tendency in the world. The tyranny is doomed to failure.

Today, we remember June 4th and mourn and honor the heroes who devoted their lives to the cause of China's democracy. We must not forget their unfinished cause. As long as all the Chinese people, at home and abroad, unite together and make joint efforts, a free and democratic China will come. We are very grateful to the people of the world, especially the American people, for their sympathy and support. With this widespread sympathy and support, a free and democratic China is bound to be established by all the Chinese people with one heart and one mind.

Attention: Will the real H. Ross Perot please stand up

BY JACK MCCARTHY
MANAGING EDITOR

Awakenings

The virtual unreality of the Ross, excuse me, I mean H. Ross Perot phenomenon, gets more unreal by the moment. Like Steven Spielberg's Goonies, Perot and his beaming horde of devotees have suddenly taken over the tavern, if not the entire town.

Ask some of them to explain this or that contradiction in their candidate's position and they flash scornful smiles and ask you which anti-Perot conspiracy you're a part of.

Temporarily awake after years in a political coma, Perot's minions march about the hinterland, torches in hand, telling anyone who will listen—not to mention those who won't—that there's a light at the end of the tunnel, a way out of the nightmare that is America in 1992.

The light, the way, of course, is H. Ross Perot.

It promises to get more interesting. Based on exit polls from Tuesday's primary elections, the media has officially conferred upon Perot political superstar status. So be assured that it won't be long before the barber who clips his hair (every day apparently) is in our face regaling us with tales of H.R.P.

Meanwhile, all the overpaid experts who clog up cable television with their incessant, irrelevant chatter are still desperately grasping for an analysis more cogent than whether the candidate is "Beltway or outside the Beltway."

Proof that they still haven't come to grips with American Perot(n)ism is the fact that you can never find a Perot(n)ist on these shows. But Bush/Clinton flaks are everywhere.

It seems that the McGauglin group and the Capitol Gang believed the post-Cold War world fracture wouldn't touch us. Yet another arrow in the heart of the theory of American exceptionalism propounded by liberal and conservative scholars alike; excepted from history, excepted from class conflict, etc. etc. America, meet the New World Order.

As for Perot, he can barely contain his glee. Those rare times you see him, he's beaming like the proverbial jack-o'-lantern. In between disturbing comments about banning homosexuals and adulterers from certain (when, I wonder, is someone going to ask him if he'd hire Murphy Brown?) government jobs, the man who says "don't vote for me if you hate," is slowly but surely perfecting the art of avoiding the media shark pool. Like another chameleon and loner, Richard Nixon, H.R.P. is getting along just fine without sharing his ideas, thank you.

"See you at the electronic town hall meeting," he tells those who want to interview him.

Were Howard Hughes alive and fighting off germs and paranoia, he'd make an excellent choice as Perot's Vice President, no?

You can bet that Perot's obvious desire to avoid any environment he can't control hasn't gone unnoticed. Bush and Clinton handlers are drooling at the prospect of having him participate in the Presidential debates. In such a forum, it's assumed the Texas Truman will be forced to speak off the top of his head, where many distressing thoughts call home.

I heard campaign officials from the Reagan and Bush campaigns debating the other night on Larry King Live whether or not they would allow Perot to participate in the debates. A better question might have been, "Will front-runner Perot agree to appear with Bush and

■FOR WHAT IT'S WORTH■

Clinton?" Don't be surprised if Perot's reply is, "No thanks, I got an electronic town hall meeting to tend to."

Trudeau vs Perot

Perot(n)ists are livid at cartoonist Garry Trudeau's mock fax communicate to H.R.P. in last Sunday's New York Times op-ed page. After a nasty introduction in which the faxer describes himself as an "ordinary person" interested only in Perot's "principals," but not at all interested in his "positions," the candidate is asked to explain a variety of his controversial morals. One example: "Which of your principals inspired the House Ways and Means Committee to strike a late night secret deal giving you a special $15 million tax break?"

And, the fax asks, what principal motivated him to (allegedly) try to blackmail a Pentagon official and the editor of the Fort Worth Star. News reports have reported these allegations but the charges haven't stuck to the Teflon non-presidential candidate.

Perot's followers may be in for a big letdown. Eventually he's going to have to explain some of the more serious allegations that he's managed to duck so far. His role in Iran-contra (Oliver North stands by charges in his book, written before the rise of Perot(n)ism that Perot tried to talk him into being the fall guy for Reagan and Bush) and charges of blackmail will probably send a lot of Democrats and independents back to Clinton. And the big loser in the end will probably be Bush.

Students, teaching keep FSU prof going

BY DARWIN ANG
FLAMBEAU WRITER

On the left side of Florida State University professor James C. Smith's office, a computer screen blinks intermittently as the cracks from the venetian blinds directly ahead form perfect white lines on the keyboard. To the right of the windows, a pile of papers hides a wooden desk, and on the doorway hangs a formica board with a collage of happy faces.

"Do you want to know who those people are?" asks Smith, a professor of psychology at Florida State University. "Those are pictures of family, students, and professional friends from all over the world."

Smith leans back in his chair smiling as his bifocals slip slightly down his nose.

"Some of my students have become my best friends," said the 63-year-old Smith. "Young people have kept me young."

Smith recently received the honor of being named the Robert O. Lawton Distinguished Professor for research and teaching, the highest award for FSU professors.

"Being a Lawton Professor holds great meaning and importance to me," Smith said in a recent interview. "Robert Lawton was a close friend and a good man."

Lawton was FSU's provost under Bernie Sliger. He died 12 years ago in an automobile accident.

"Why I got the award, I'm not very sure," Smith said modestly. "There are probably at least 15 people just as deserving."

A Lawton Distinguished Professorship is a lifetime honor with a one-time stipend of either $2,000 or $2,500. The position includes an account with the FSU Foundation to support the research of the distinguished professor and other named professors, which adds up to $800 a year.

"We mainly felt that Dr. Smith was strong in all three categories (teaching, research and service), whereas other candidates were only strong in perhaps two of the three," said mathematics Professor Robert Gilmer, chair of the selection committee.

Smith said his research helps bridge the gap between behavioral psychology and mainstream science.

"I like to consider myself a hybrid between the research of Dr. Kellogg, who was interested in the comparison behavior between man and animal, and the works of Dr. Biedler and Dr. Baker, who were interested in the senses," Smith said. "The theme of my research mainly deals with the sensory processes in animals and humans."

"Here, let me show you a short experiment on taste done on rats," Smith said, quickly pulling out a sheet of paper from the pile of papers. He drew a graph with an inverted parabola. "Here we can see that the rats prefer the concentration of sucrose at 0.25 moles at long durations, but our data indicates that the nerve activity on a rat's palate, which detects sugar, rises linearly with respect to concentration."

"Now, the question is, why does something that brings so much satisfaction to the rat have a limit?" Smith said, peering through his glasses. "Well, as it turns out, rats can only take a certain amount of calories."

Smith's research also applies directly to people. For example, he has studied the effects of chemotherapy on the diet of cancer patients. He later discovered that individuals develop a taste aversion for foods taken after being exposed to sublethal amounts of radiation over a period of time—a problem, he said, that taking antihistamines can solve.

Currently, Smith has a grant from the National Institute of Aging to study the effects of aging on the sense of taste.

"We know taste can be affected by disease and the older we get, the more susceptible to disease we are," said Smith. "We want to find out if taste can be worn down by attrition."

Although Smith considers his research a high priority, he holds equal regard for teaching.

"I don't consider them to be separate things. To be a good teacher, one needs to be a good scholar," Smith said. "New information needs to be shared because research is not research until it's shared."

Smith stared for a moment and looked up. "I'm not sure I know how to teach (perfectly) since I am constantly learning.

But anyone who has a reasonable head on their shoulders, I'm sure I can teach them anything."

Outside of FSU, Smith has relatively eclectic interests, from listening to Mozart and playing a mean game of class B handball, to his locally acclaimed artistry.

"Woodcarving is something I aspire to do more often," Smith said. Then he laughed. "The most pompous thing I ever did was sign my name under a line that said 'artist.'"

Smith's talent for working with wood carried over from his experience in carpentry when he built his own house in North Carolina.

With years of experience in the university system, Smith has become uninhibited on his sure advice to present and future psychology majors.

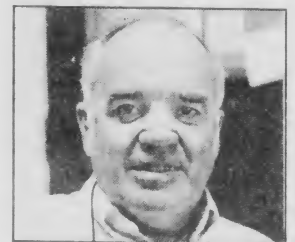

"You can get an excellent education at FSU," Smith boomed. "Don't sit there like a bump on a log. Talk to your professors as quickly as you can and get into somebody's clinic or lab, and then find out if that is what you want to do for the rest of your life."

"Fight them all the way until you get in," Smith said. "I'll tell you what you should do. Go to the science library, pick up about three articles from the professor you want to work with and read them. After that, visit the professor and tell him that you're interested in the area of his research by proving your knowledge of his work."

"If someone came up to me and did those things, I'd be butter in their hands," Smith said. "Not too many students will make the extra effort, though."

For some scientists, the only source of inspiration is the Nobel Prize. But for Smith, it seems that inspiration also stems from the potential of his students.

"Teaching and research requires one to be committed to death. I genuinely love my students and the people I work with," Smith said. "You know, I really admire you guys, you have your whole lives ahead of you to make something of yourselves."

phco of Florida Inc., offered the 33-unit Knights Inn off North Monroe Street to the homeless coalition more than a year ago, both as a gesture of goodwill and because he needed to make room for a new, 100-room Comfort Inn.

But the coalition has yet to move the hotel to a new site, thanks to circumstances largely beyond its control, and time is running out: Coalition officials say the businessman has told them that if they aren't able to take the modular units out of his hands soon—possibly by July 1—he may reluctantly move them himself or tear them down.

"We'd certainly like for him to wait longer, but he made the offer a long time ago. He's not trying to be hard-nosed," Keith Hughes, the coalition's executive director, said Tuesday. "We really don't have any control at this point."

The coalition had planned to transplant most of the units to a parcel of city-owned land on the south side of town that the city has tentatively agreed to give to the coalition. The roughly one-acre parcel is worth about $15,000.

Once there, the units were to be renovated and rearranged into a dozen separate living quarters that local homeless families could use until they got back on their feet.

But the coalition hasn't been able to follow through on the transfer because its transitional housing proposal for the city property is caught up in the permitting and zoning processes, and because the city has yet to give its final stamp of approval to the land deal.

In the meantime, Murphey's been getting antsy.

"We have a time frame we have to go by," Murphey said about his company Tuesday, although he wouldn't be specific. "I'm doing everything I can ... to accommodate (the coalition)."

Hughes said Murphey has given the coalition until July 1 to move the hotel off his property. But even under the best of circumstances, he said, the permitting process won't be completed until July 15.

And, he added, the coalition doesn't have the money to move the buildings first to a temporary site and then later to the city parcel. Moving the buildings just one time, he said, will cost about $40,000.

Losing the buildings could also jeopardize a $268,000 federal grant for transitional housing the coalition has applied for.

"It would certainly be a major disappointment that the circumstances were such that we couldn't take advantage of this opportunity," Hughes said.

In an effort to keep Murphey's offer from falling through the cracks, Hughes said the coalition is trying to arrange a meeting between the three parties involved.

Mayor Bob Hightower said Wednesday that he had just been made aware there could be a problem with the coalition's plans, and that he had to gather more details from city staff before commenting.

Judy Truett, with the city's Department of Community Improvement, said it would be difficult to move up the timetable for the land deal because a public hearing is required before the coalition can get the zoning exception it needs for the project. But, she added, the situation is "soluble."

"I think it is in everyone's best interests for this to go forward," said Truett, whose office works closely with the homeless coalition.

Murphey said he is open to suggestions.

"I want to see if we can work it out," he said, refusing to elaborate further.

Cynthia Welsh, president-elect of the homeless coalition, said having Murphey's offer fall through would be a major setback for the coalition.

Transitional housing is a major component in the group's five-year comprehensive plan, which was endorsed by the City Commission last week and is designed to address homelessness in Tallahassee with long-term solutions.

Losing the buildings could also jeopardize a $268,000 federal grant for transitional housing the coalition has applied for, she added.

"There's a lot at stake here," Welsh said. "We probably have $40,000 in (the transitional housing project) already."

in dire need of food and clothing, as could be deduced from the dozen or so people looking for these items at the church-run Mission Juan Diego in Greensboro Tuesday afternoon.

"We always need everything, food and clothing," said Mary Matthews, coordinator of the mission, which is open Tuesday through Thursday. "And children's clothes, forget it. You never have enough."

Matthews said nearly 100 families came in for help last week, up from approximately 60 or 70 the previous week—before the bulk of the migrants arrived in town.

But as needy as the farmworkers are this year, officials say it looks like they are going to be better off than last year, when an early frost shortened the autumn harvest by several weeks, leaving many of them in dire straits.

"Last fall, that was a crisis situation," said Linda de la Garza, the migrant outreach worker for Job Services of Quincy. "I had farmworkers sleeping in cars. They had no work, they had no food."

"The people were starving to death. It was horrible," de la Garza said, adding that though she foresees no such situation this year, it's too early to tell for sure.

Some farmworkers said life would improve for them if they could settle down in one place, but given the nature of farmwork, they say that's a difficult thing to do.

'You have to deal with peoples' needs in their entirety. (The clinic) is an incredible model for the whole health system to be built on.'

—Laurie McCort

"That's all we do is go from one place to another," said Joe, a 20-year-old who recently arrived from south Florida. "We plan on staying sometime. We're planning on doing that, but it's pretty hard."

Juan, a farmworker from Immokalee, gave one reason why it's hard for many workers to find more stable employment.

"A lot of people here just can't speak the English," Juan said. "That's why it's real hard for them to find the year-round jobs."

And although there are job training programs available to farmworkers through Tallahassee's Lively Vocational Technical Center, and literacy programs offered in Quincy, many of the workers, even if they know of them, simply move on to the next place on the migrant circuit in order to make their wage.

"Once you finish here, you have to go to South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia," Joe said.

Officials issue warning as cases of melanoma increase in Florida

BY DON BOWMER

STAFF WRITER

With a 4.5 percent increase in skin cancer in Florida since 1989, state health officials have issued the most severe warning yet to sun-lovers to cover up with a strong sunblock when going out into the sun.

The Florida Office of Health and Rehabilitative Services issued the warning last month to cover up with a high sun protection factor sun block, limit time outside or stay inside altogether in order to avoid developing malignant melanoma, which is increasing in growing numbers.

And the warnings have left sunbathers like Luanne Hummel wondering how they'll ever get a decent tan.

"What's the point?" the Tallahassee Community College student said of using high-SPF suntan lotions. "If you use anything stronger than five, you have to stay out for days to get a tan."

But with a rise in melanoma cases since 1989, Jill Lowe, local director of the American Cancer Society, is trying to fight that kind of thinking.

"The cancer foundation is estimating 2,200 new cases of melanoma in Florida alone in 1992," Lowe said, adding that there are currently some 600,000 UV-related skin cancer cases throughout the United States.

She added that new research shows some people who were repeatedly sunburned as children are developing skin cancer as adults after mild sunburns.

Though officials say it's difficult to get an exact figure on how many cases of melanoma have occurred in Florida, statistics from the Centers for Disease Control show that approximately 6,200 people died from melanoma in the United States last year.

According to David Adams, spokesperson for Florida's Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, melanoma is the most deadly form of cancer if not treated early.

"It is the repeated exposure of already damaged skin to ultraviolet radiation from the sun that is the leading cause of skin cancer today," Adams said.

The Office of Health recommends that people with any sort of sunburn stay inside as much as possible, and wear suntan lotion with a sun protection factor of Statistics from the Centers for Disease Control show that approximately 6,200 people died from melanoma in the United States last year.

30 when venturing outside.

"We're advising people not to go out in the sun for more than one hour without protection," Adams said.

"When you're using lotion, you need to use at least 15 SPF. Let it soak in for at least a half hour and then reapply it every three or four hours," he added.

One local resident has already changed her tanning habits during recent trips to Panama City Beach.

"Since my mom got skin cancer two years ago, I've been thinking about it more," said Vicky Meyers, a former Florida State University student. "I try to lay out earlier in the day or later in the afternoon. And I always wear sunscreen, especially on my face."

The Office of Health advises workers who must be outside all day to use lotion with an SPF of 30 or above. Workers are also advised to wear hats to protect the scalp's thin layer of skin.

"If anyone notices dark spots or bumps on their skin, then we advise them to seek medical attention immediately," Adams said.

According to Paul Duval, director of the National Weather Service's new ozone measurement facility at the Tallahassee Airport, the increase in skin cancer cases may be related to the gradually depleting ozone layer.

"Since we're sure there are some decreases in ozone molecules, we can assume there is an increase in harmful UV rays in the lower atmosphere," Duval said. "And we know UV radiation is one of the key factors in skin cancer. We might conclude that ozone depletion is having some effect, although there are many factors related to cancer."

NOAA and public and private sources.

FSU meteorology professor Steve Stage, who helped set up the facility, said that since students had been collecting the data and were usually gone on weekends, the department agreed that the National Weather Service would be better equipped to keep regular measurements.

The facility is equipped with the Dobson Ozone spectrophotometer, an ultraviolet ray measurement device named after scientist Gordon Dobson. He found that by measuring the amount of UV radiation in the atmosphere, he could tell how much protective ozone remained in the upper stratosphere.

"The spectrophotometer measures wave lengths produced by ultraviolet radiation," Duval said. "It works similar to a prism by breaking down and analyzing the color spectrum."

According to Duval, all measurements are classified in two categories based on the amount of cloud coverage.

"On sunny days, our readings are clear and accurate," Duval said. "But on cloudy days, the readings are obscured since it is difficult to determine whether or not the amount of UV rays reaching the lower atmosphere is being blocked out by the ozone molecules or by the cloud coverage."

'We know the ozone layer is depleting in places to the North, so it is essential we begin preparing for the future here in the South.'

—Paul Duval, National Weather Service

Duval explained that the volcanic eruption in the Philippines last summer may also cause inaccurate readings this year.

"Since the volcanic emissions from Mount Pinatubo are slowly moving over the Western continents, our readings may soon become questionable," Duval said. "Since volcanic ash also blocks out ultraviolet rays, it may not be possible to determine the precise degree of ozone depletion."

One additional problem with the Dobson device is that it measures ozone throughout the atmosphere, making it difficult to tell exactly how much ozone is located in the stratosphere.

Stage said since lower atmospheric ozone is caused by pollution, it's important to use additional sources to determine how much of the good upper atmosphere ozone is present.

Off-street opens eyes with its Vision of Love

BY CHRIS PARKER
STAFF WRITER

Infiltrating the bars and clubs of Tallahassee is a new breed of entertainment, deeply indebted to one of the oldest. No, the slave trade and prostitution are not making inroads but drama is, as Off-Street Players presents yet another Off-Off-Street production, A Vision of Love Revealed in Sleep, showing Saturday and Sunday at Club Park Avenue.

The play is a recent import from Britain, where it was presented in 1989 by British writer, director and performer Neil Bartlett. A flowing piece, it follows the dreams and thoughts of the protagonist as he searches for facts on the life of Simeon Solomon, a somewhat obscure, gay Victorian artist, a search that becomes a journey of self-discovery.

Vision is a rich play full of interesting theatrical techniques, as well as musical numbers culled from American pop culture, and in particular, Judy Garland (the original version contained British show tunes). It deals thoughtfully with the problems, and the search for a sense of history and identity, of the lesbian and gay communities.

Director Rob Nixon, in his inaugural production, has teamed with a talented ensemble of current and former Florida State University actors, who contributed to the re-writing of the script.

"Everyone had input," said Nixon. "We discussed it and everyone had contributions. We talked about what was being said, and how we connected individually with each scene."

Nixon, a local writer and performer in several Off-Street productions, was nervous at first, but pushed to get this done.

"When I read it, it really caught my attention," said Nixon. "It was something I connected with personally. Though I was nervous about it at first, it has turned out very well."

This is the third Off-Street performance to permeate such mod hang-outs as CPA, the Grand Finale, and Yanni's, away from their usual space in the Young Actor's Studio.

A Vision of Love Revealed in Sleep shows at 8 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday at the Club Park Avenue, 115 E. Park Avenue. Admission is $10 on

The Bad Livers explode with good music

BY MICK BUCHANAN

SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

What do you get when you throw a handful of musical genres—acoustic, speed metal, bluegrass, thrash—into the blender and puree at high speed? If you're lucky, you get the Bad Livers, an Austin, Tex.-based band that rocks it up at Club 506 Friday night.

The Livers lineup includes Danny Barnes on banjo and vocals, Mark Rubin on bass and tuba, and Ralph White on fiddle and accordion. Barnes has long been a fixture on the Austin scene and previously played with the Barnburners. Rubin had previously been road manager for the Buck Rams, and has played with the LeRoi Brothers and Killbilly. The band took their name in homage to their heroes, the Bad Brains.

The Bad Livers have been together for less than a year and don't yet have a record contract, but they've already created quite a buzz in Austin as one of the hot new up and coming bands. That reputation is based on their rather eclectic songlist.

The Livers have been known to cover the musical spectrum from Motorhead's "Ace of Spades" to Flatt and Scruggs, from a banjo-ized version of Jimi Hendrix's "Fire" to "Brownsville Blues" by Sleepy Joe Estes, from "Lust for Life" by Iggy Pop to Loretta Lynn's "I Live In A World Of Forgotten People." And it wouldn't do to leave out mention of their medley of songs by such sledgehammers as Slayer, Hendrix, Led Zep, and Guns 'n' Roses, all delivered in the style of a "bluegrass power trio."

The band recently played a showcase gig at the annual South by Southwest Music Festival in Austin, has been mentioned in Rolling Stone magazine, and are being ardently courted by several record companies. They have toured with traditional bluegrass bands such as the Dillards, as well as fellow stranglings the Butthole Surfers and 3 Mustaphas 3.

Opening for the Bad Livers is a new group on the local scene, Attackula, which is one-third Frankenfinger (guitarist Drew Watson) and two-thirds Magic Juan (drummer Will Ryan and bassist/guitarist John McNeese).

The Bad Livers

The Bad Livers, cowpunks from out Texas way, ride into Club 506 Friday night, with opening honors done by Attackula. Doors open at 10 p.m., music starts at 10:30. Admission is $4, and it's an 18-plus show.

Tallahassee Museum hosts Planet Party

BY ANDREW ARVESEN

STAFF WRITER

Earth Day may be over, but the twin needs for decisive environmental action and a good party are constant. In this spirit of wedding fun to function, the Tallahassee Museum of History and Natural Science (formerly the Tallahassee Junior Museum) is throwing a Planet Party on Saturday.

The Planet Party is a massive ecoblowout, a three-ring circus of fun, games and responsible stewardship of the Earth's resources. Events will run all day and run the gamut from playing with a gigantic Earth Ball to lectures about birdwatching, recycling demonstrations, reggae music, a pie contest, and a bicycle doctor. A conscious effort has been made to provide stimulating and enjoyable activities for anyone with an interest in the environment, regardless of age.

"It's a fun way to learn," said organizer Antoinette McGroarty.

But the Planet Party is also an attempt to get people off the sidelines, making them aware and involved in their environment. Some critics say that Earth Day has increasingly become a commercialized occasion for smug back-patting and absurd lies, like advertisements claiming that nuclear power is the "green" alternative to "dirty" foreign oil. Organizers hope the Planet Party will not only focus attention on ecological problems, but show individuals how to help solve these problems.

"(Like Earth Day) this is about environmental issues," said McGroarty. "But we're not just pomp and circumstance and talk. We're showing people how to get involved."

The Planet Party is an attempt to teach people that recycling is more than just separating trash. It's a

Art mirrors life in Summer Rep's Emily

BY CHRIS PARKER
STAFF WRITER

The substance of life is the source of drama, and when we can't face the reality of our surroundings we seek escape. The crux of this conflict is at the heart of Florida State's Summer Repertory performance of Emily by Stephen Metcalf.

During an intermission, a man outside the theatre confided his recent marital troubles to me, a complete stranger, explaining that what had been meant to take his mind off it had only succeeded in making him uncomfortable with a reminder of his pain. He left before the play was over.

His predicament proved poignant in the context of the play. Emily toys with male/female stereotypes, washing them through with a series of jokes and metaphors about what a woman wants and what a man wants.

In the eye of this maelstrom is the protagonist, Emily Brown (Angie Stanley), a woman in the man's world of high finance on Wall Street. Emily is self-sufficient, successful and frustrated, because cool and control—her native plane at work—only confuse her turbulent emotions. Rather than submit to the uncertainties of commitment, she escapes by upping the ante with her prospective suitors, asking them to marry her, which of course makes them balk and leave. Neat, clean and effective.

Effective, that is, until she really falls for John Stone (David Belisle), an actor from the wholesome Midwest, whose professions of love are more than just lines. What follows is a sometimes pat love story that aspires to be as profound as Streetcar Named Desire.

Emily addresses the audience at intervals, revealing her fears and insecurities in a self-deprecatory fashion that is funny and sometimes disturbing. What saves it from being a typical love story is its adherence to the facts. People are often unhappy and unsatisfied, filled with doubts even in the midst of good things. Fear of rejection can cause us to discard the very source of our happiness.

The facts are disturbing. We'd much rather be comforted by a happy ending than be reminded of our foibles. And yet, there is something of a catharsis in hearing the truth. It sustains us longer than fanciful fantasies.

Stanley handles Emily with style, giving her a walk and a way large enough for a title role. Belisle, too, is strong, though his affable character is a bit vanilla. Kudos also go to Charles Olsen, who gives even the small role of the hot dog vendor flavor. Solid small character performances abound, particularly Jerry Genochio as Emily's lecherous, self-important co-worker.

The direction by Patrice Bailey is seamless, outstanding in a play as full of scene shifts as this one is.

At times the stereotypes seem almost offensive, and the love story condescending, but then the play returns to the perspective and insight at the heart of the story. Sometimes great, and always honest, Emily ends like a good friend telling us something we don't want to hear, but which we'll thank him for later.

Emily shows at the Lab Theatre tonight and Saturday at 8. Call 644-6500 for additional dates. Admission is $5 for the general public, and free with your FSU ID.

CALENDAR

FOR ALL YOU AFFICIANADOS OF THE OLD AND FUNKY, THE TALLAHASSEE MALL hosts an Antique and Collectible Show and Sale today through Sunday. The show will feature such delectable collectibles as sterling, china and glass, vintage clothing, postcards, farm items and tools, Victorian paper, primitives, Dresden, toys, pottery, coin silver, hats, auto tags, sleigh bells, and more, more, more! Hours are 10 a.m. until 9 p.m. today through Saturday, and 12:30 until 5:30 on Sunday. For more information, call 385-7145.

THE TALLAHASSEE BACH PARLEY PRESENTS ITS SUMMER CONCERT FRIDAY NIGHT at 8 at the Epiphany Lutheran Church, 3208 Thomasville Rd. The program will include works by Henry Purcell, John Blow, Thomas Campian, Tobias Hume, William Corkine, John Eccles, Daniel Purcell, Heinrich Schutz, J.S. Bach, Dietrich Buxtehude, Daniel Pinkham, and Peter Racine Fricker. Admission is by donation at the door, and the Parley provides free babysitting for the convenience of its audience friends. Call 877-6904 for more information.

THE SECOND ANNUAL CULTURAL RESOURCES: A JURIED EXHIBITION WILL be on display at the LeMoyné Art Foundation beginning Friday, June 5, through July 5. The exhibit features work by 34 regional artists, and is sponsored by the Tallahassee-Leon County Cultural Resources Commission. The gallery will host an opening reception Friday night from 7-9, with the winners of this year's event announced at 8 p.m. For more information, call 681-1985.

FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY'S PRESIDENT'S GALLERY HOSTS THE "COMMAND PERFORMANCE EXHIBIT" featuring papier mache masks and weavings by Rickards High School students. The exhibit opens Friday and runs through Aug. 1. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. through 4 p.m. each Friday and by special appointment. For more information, call 644-0801.

ATTENTION, PONY GIRLS AND BOYS! GET READY TO HOP ALONG DOWN THE ROUNDUP TRAIL ... At Bimini's, John Blue lifts the spirits of weary cowpokes during Happy Hour Friday night, and Colin Jr. and the Root Doctors do some hoodoo Friday and Saturday night. Sunday afternoon tropical breezes will blow through the Island Jam with John Blue and John Paul Jones, after which Johari Window will host the ever popular Dead Night. Call 575-4183 for more information.

Phoenix Uprising parties up a reggae storm at the Mill Bakery and Eatery on the Parkway during Friday's Happy Hour, and local celebrities Zombie Birdhouse entertain the beer-and-muffin-and-excellent-salad-bar crowd Friday and Saturday. The cover is usually $2, but call 656-2867 to make sure.

Tonight at the Grand Finale (and it is grand, indeed), Bloodhound funks it up. Friday night, Canal Street throws one hell of a musical birthday party, and Saturday night the Shatterposts pound it out. There is usually a cover for these things, and it is usually small. Call 599-9358 for more information. Club 506 is the scene of the crime for the Bad Livers from Austin, Texas, preceded by Attackula (which sounds like a breakfast cereal from Hell). Doors open at 10 p.m., music starts at 10:30. It's an 18-plus show (plus what?) and admission is $4.

At the home of Tallahassee's musical moose—a.k.a. Bullwinkle's—the Real Men entertain real people with real live music tonight through Saturday night. During Friday's Happy Hour, Mainstreet jump starts the post-work week crowd, and John "the Binkmeister" Kurzweg tickles fancies Sunday night. Now, you know there's no cover for all this stuff.

Wow dee dow dow! Head on down to the Moon Friday night for Stetson's Country Night with Rebecca Holden, that luscious redhead from Nightrider, General Hospital and The Love Boat. The first show starts at 10 and the second at midnight. Doors open at 7 for FREE country dance lessons, for all y'all cowpokes with two left feet (or hoofs, as the case may be). After 9 p.m., admission is $3 for those 21 and over and $5 for ages 18-20. Call 222-MOON for more information.

Tonight is Open Mike Night at the Hole In The Wall, and as if that wasn't enough enticement for you, it's also Ladies' Night. Friday night Jabberwocky dives through the looking glass with Sproing, and Sunday night a country DJ plays all your favorite C&W tunes. Call 561-8445 to find out if any of this costs anything. At the Main Event, the Mighty Big Blues Band fills up the dance floor Friday night and Switchgear changes things up Saturday night. Call 681-2344 for information.

And at that gem of an oyster bar/pool hall/zen arcade, the Pearl, the Blue Monday Guys play the blues so good it'll make a mollusk weep salty tears. Call 878-9444 to find out more.

That's all for this week, young riders. And all kidding aside, the trail boss and her minions would like to extend their most heartfelt sympathy to Errol Kolosine, raconteur, drummer par excellence, radio magnate, and Tracy Horenbein, formerly lead chanteuse for Smack Leveau, both of whom suffered the death of a parent last week. Vaya con Dios, amigos.

ment doesn't stop there. The Museum is home to several endangered animals, and they have workshops and lectures every weekend to help people learn more about nature and how to preserve it.

Every person in Tallahassee helps to make this city a better or worse habitat for the species who live here, including humans. At the Planet Party, you can learn how to help make a better world. And have a great time doing it.

The Planet Party runs from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, June 6, at the Tallahassee Museum. Activities include puppet shows, nature walks, face painting, lectures on landscaping, live music, and assorted other good stuff. Local and national environmental organizations will have information booths set up. Admission is the regular Museum admission: $5 for adults, $3 for children ages 4-15, and free to those under 3 years old. For more information, call 575-8684.

Titan hurlers send FSU home

BY RICH MCCRARY
STAFF WRITER

OMAHA, Neb.—Another year, another berth in the College World Series and another trip back to Tallahassee empty-handed for Florida State.

The Seminoles exited the CWS after a 6-0 loss to California State-Fullerton Tuesday. The team finished tied for fifth in the eight team field.

Florida State was done in by many things Tuesday—poor hitting, double plays and an inability to find the strike zone all hurt the Seminoles. But what hurt the most was the pitching of Titan freshman Mike Parisi.

Parisi, pitching despite having mononucleosis and strep throat, threw six innings of two-hit, shutout ball and got the win to go 5-1 on the season.

"I got a little tired at the end of the fifth," Parisi said Tuesday. "But this is the World Series; nothing was going to keep me from going out there."

Meanwhile, the Seminoles had a tough time finding anyone to throw the ball across the plate.

Chris Roberts, the 18th player chosen in the amateur draft, started for FSU and took the loss. Roberts gave up two hits, two runs and five walks before departing in the third inning.

"It just wasn't Chris' day out there," FSU coach Mike Martin said. "He might have settled down but we didn't have time to find out."

The Seminole bullpen didn't fare much better, with relievers Paul Wilson, Bryan Harris, Jim Rushworth and John Wasdin combining for six more walks.

Despite its pitching woes, FSU was still in the game in the seventh inning when outfielders Ty Mueller and Chris Brock led off with singles.

However, Martin chose to let Kevin McCray swing away rather than bunt. McCray promptly hit into a 3-6-1 double play, all but killing the Seminoles' chances to score.

Both coaches agreed that was the key play of the game.

"That was big for us," Titan coach Augie Garrido said. "It broke up some of their momentum."

Martin defended his decision to let McCray swing away instead of laying down a sacrifice bunt.

"We felt if we could get a pitch he could pull, we could stay out of the double play," Martin said.

"The first baseman made an outstanding play. I wouldn't do it any differently unless we had some speed at the plate, then we might bunt for a base hit. Two runs aren't going to do any good in that situation."

Titan reliever Paco Chavez retired the next eight batters and Fullerton added three runs in the ninth to put the game away.

With the loss, the Seminoles have been to Omaha 13 times without winning a championship. Martin had brought his club there five times in the last seven years.

The loss also ended Martin's string of 12 consecutive 50-win seasons. It was Florida State's first 20-loss season since 1985 and only the fourth in Martin's 13 years as head coach at FSU.

Despite the negatives, Martin said he was pleased with his team's accomplishments.

"Nobody expected us to get this far," Martin said. "Getting to Omaha is a heck of a feat in itself."

"This is the best year we've had in my 18 years as a coach."

FSU, FAMU players picked

BY MARK NESSMITH
SPORTS EDITOR

If by some cruel and perverted twist of fate, you haven't heard, Florida A&M and Florida State baseball players did quite well in this week's major league draft.

Here's a run-down: Kenny Felder (FSU, first round/12th pick, Brewers). Chris Roberts (FSU, first round/18th pick, Mets). Roger Bailey (FSU, third round, Rockies). Willie Bown (FAMU, fourth round, Marlins). Tim Davis (FSU, sixth round, Mariners). Morisse Daniels (FAMU, 11th round, Angels). Chris Brock (FSU, 12th round, Braves). Curtis George (FAMU, 16th round, Indians).

Okay, let's make one thing clear: If you put money on Portland in Game 1 of the NBA Finals, and the person you bet with gave 32 points, you still lost.

The Finals, matching the Trail Blazers and Chicago, took off Wednesday night and people have been buzzing about the confrontation that was expected when the season began about two million years ago. (So I exaggerate a little.)

The Bulls' rout may have dampened viewers' enthusiasm some, but here at the Flambeau we have a solution should the series continue in this fashion.

Next time the point spread goes beyond, say 15 points, just pull out this handy Trivia Time-Out column. As Dave Letterman might say, it will dazzle the kids and baffle the neighbors.

• Both franchises are making their third appearance in the finals. Portland dumped Philadelphia in 1977, but lost to Detroit in 1990. Chicago lost to Philadelphia way back in 1947—the league's inaugural championship—and of course, won last season.

• Should the Bulls win again, they will become the third team in a row to accomplish the back-to-back feat, following Detroit and the Los Angeles Lakers.

COMMENTARY

• Despite all that this year's championship round has, it's missing a familiar element. For 11 of the past 12 years, either Boston or Los Angeles have competed for the trophy. The Celtics and Lakers have combined for eight titles during that time and have won 27 of the league's total 45 crowns.

• The winning team will cash a check for $680,000 and the poor losers have to make do with $455,000.

• The odds are against this series lasting seven games. Of the past 21, only four have ended 4-3. Overall, less than one-third (14 of 45) went seven. Five losers were swept in four games.

• Michael Jordan (Boy, more than half a column before mentioning him; that must be a record.) can become the only player in NBA history to twice lead the league in scoring and take his team to the championship. Kareem Abdul Jabbar (then Lew Alcindor) did it once with Milwaukee in 1970-71.

• Each team has a former John Wooden Award winner on its roster. Jordan was the recipient of the honor, given to college's best player, in 1984 when he was with North

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

CHICAGO—Michael Jordan, making 3-pointers look as easy as dunks, scored a record 35 of his 39 points in the first half Wednesday night to spark the Chicago Bulls to a 122-83 rout of the Portland Trail Blazers in the opening game of the NBA Finals.

Jordan connected on 14 of 21 field-goal attempts in the first half, including six of 9 from 3-point range. His 35 first-half points surpassed the record of 33, set by former Los Angeles Lakers' great Elgin Baylor against Boston April 14, 1962.

Jordan, who tied a Finals record with his six 3-pointers, was five of 16 from 3-point range in the three earlier playoff rounds combined. The superstar guard finished 16 of 27 from the field and added 11 assists.

"I was in a zone," Jordan said. "My threes felt like free throws."

The 33-point victory fell just shy of being the most lopsided game in Finals history. The previous record was 35 points, set June 4, 1978, when Washington blew out Seattle 117-82.

The best-of-seven series resumes Friday night before shifting to Portland for the next three games. The Bulls lost Game 1 of the Finals last season before running off four straight wins to defeat the Lakers for their first NBA championship.

The Trail Blazers were the ones who came into the Finals with the reputation for long-distance shooting. Portland hit 30 3-pointers in the Western Conference finals against Utah to tie and NBA playoff mark for a six-game series.

boy from Brigham Young.

• Thanks to the NBA league office in New York for these numbers: ninety-three countries, six continents (Antarctica apparently isn't too hot for basketball) and over 100 million homes will be watching the finals. No report on how many of those viewers want to be like Mike.

Repairs to Lick's house over $140,000

BY MATT GRIMISON

STAFF WRITER

Renovations and repairs to Florida State University's president's house and box at Doak Campbell Stadium last year cost FSU $141,500, almost 250 percent more than costs reported by the administration just after the work was completed last July.

According to FSU physical plant Director Tom Knowles, $115,000 was spent on the house alone in what university officials have termed "modest, cosmetic" repairs with another $26,500 spent on work done to the president's box and surrounding area at the stadium.

The administration reported last year that all the renovations to the house and box had cost $40,000.

"Suddenly we cannot trust the information the administration is giving us," Harry Goldman, president of the FSU chapter of the United Faculty of Florida, said Sunday. "This has occurred again and again. It's not just a small mistake."

The work was done just after university president Dale Lick moved into the house. Lick quoted the $40,000 figure to the Flambeau last August—approximately one month after the work was done.

"That figure could have been for a small part of what was being done," Lick said Sunday.

Study: Students not practicing safe sex

BY SAMUEL WHITE

FLAMBEAU WRITER

Safe sex is often discussed, but rarely practiced by local college students, according to a survey released last week by the Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

"Just having knowledge of AIDS won't prevent the spread of AIDS. Only if we take proper safety measures can AIDS be prevented," HRS AIDS Coordinator for Leon County Phil Reichert said Friday.

The survey, which questioned more than 3,000 students between the ages of 18 and 22, shows that students at Florida State University, Florida A&M University, and Tallahassee Community College know what AIDS is, how it is contracted and the prevention measures that should be taken to avoid AIDS.

But the study also shows few students incorporate that knowledge into their actions.

Of those surveyed, just under 80 percent said they had sexual relations with at least one person within the last six months. Thirty-three percent said they had sex with two or more people during the same time period.

According to the survey, condom use varied. Forty-two percent of the 3,109 surveyed said they always used condoms, 50 percent said they used condoms sometimes, and 8 percent said they never used condoms.

"The numbers are the same all around the country," said Dr. Paul Elliott, professor of biology at Florida State University. "Even though people are aware of the dangerous situation, they aren't doing much to change their sex habits."

Paul Mazzotta, an AIDS educator at the Leon County Public Health Unit, agreed.

"Students aren't putting their knowledge of AIDS to good use," Mazzotta acknowledged.

Mazzotta also pointed out that the result of not practicing safe sex often means contracting

Irradiation industry is causing concern

Despite assurances from officials, the opening of the nation's first and only food irradiation facility in Mulberry, Fla., this year has spawned public concern about the dangers and side effects of the process—as well as the motivations for using the technology.

The hoopla began when Vindicator, Inc. opened in Mulberry in January. Food & Water, Inc., a consumer action organization based in New York City, admittedly used "desperate tactics" to warn the public of health dangers resulting from the food irradiation process that included an advertising campaign asserting the process

"may kill you."

"We have to use every means we have to stop this technology," conceded Wally Burnstein, president of the organization, recently.

Chris Lecos, a spokesperson for the federal Food and Drug Administration, countered in the Fall 1991 issue of the publication 21st Century: "It is very easy to promote public fear over the word radiation. It's disturbing that this would be done with such language as food irradiation 'may kill you,' as stated in the ad Food & Water has sponsored in Florida."

FSU Prof appears on Oprah

Talk shows are still buzzing in the aftermath of Vice President Dan Quayle's comments on poverty, unwed mothers, loss of traditional morals and TV's fictional newswoman Murphy Brown's part in it all.

Appearing as a guest on today's Oprah Winfrey Show—airing at 4 p.m. on WCTV, channel 6, cable 9—is scholar, lecturer and author Dr. Na'im Akbar, an assistant in clinical psychology at Florida State University.

In a program titled "Have we lost our family values?" participants will consider if the nation is suffering from a "poverty of values" and individuals need to be held accountable for their actions, or if the government is responsible for the loss of morale and morality in America. The program will also discuss possible solutions.

BOR planning committee meets today

Speakers including Florida's lieutenant governor and three university presidents will appear before the Florida Board of Regents planning committee at today's meeting, held in room 1721 of the Florida Education Center, 325 West Gaines St., from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

BOR planners will hear from FSU President Dale Lick, Florida A&M President Frederick Humphries and the president of the University of West Florida on plans for the future and accountability measures.

Also making a presentation will be Lt. Gov. Buddy MacKay for the Government By the People Committee, a group advising Gov. Lawton Chiles on improving efficiency and streamlining state government.

The meeting is open to the public.

Boyfriend allegedly attacks

A 29-year-old woman was allegedly terrorized by her boyfriend with a knife at her home Saturday afternoon and evening, Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Annette Garrett said Sunday.

The woman told police she and her boyfriend were arguing about another man at about 2 p.m. when the boyfriend cut her with a steak knife. She suffered an eight-inch laceration to the left side of her waist.

At about 10 p.m. the argument resumed and this time the boyfriend allegedly held her against the wall while he repeatedly stabbed the wall near her face with a large meat knife. He threatened to stab her in the heart and then made a two-inch cut to her face near her lips.

When police arrived the suspect fled on foot but was apprehended after a short foot chase. Marvin W. Davis, 40, of 2109 Holton St., was charged with domestic aggravated battery, violation of probation and resisting arrest without violence.

Armed robbery

A clothing store employee making a night deposit at the City National Bank was sprayed with mace and robbed by a masked man Saturday night, Garrett said.

The 19-year-old woman was making the deposit at the bank, 1801 Apalachee Parkway, around 9:45 p.m. While the victim was sitting in her car trying to unlock the depository, the suspect appeared and sprayed her with the mace through her open window. The man then took the bank bag containing daily receipts.

The suspect was last seen running west on Apalachee Parkway. He is described as a white man in his mid-30s, five feet eight inches tall with a medium build. He was wearing a light tan T-shirt, jeans and a blue ski mask.

Pounded to the pavement

A man trying to mediate an argument was pulled from his car and severely beaten by three suspects Saturday morning, Garrett said.

Police found the victim at 1 a.m. Saturday lying in the parking lot of Shoney's restaurant, 2833 W. Call St. The victim told officers he had been trying to calm an argument between two people in the parking lot, but the altercation escalated.

The two people and another suspect turned their hostility toward the victim and pulled him from his car, punching and kicking him repeatedly. The suspects then fled in their car.

The victim was taken to the hospital for head injuries and other cuts and bruises. He was released the next day.

Garrett said Sunday that details of the incident are sketchy, but that an investigation is ongoing. She said charges are pending but didn't know what they would be.

Knife bandits attack

A man was beaten, forced into his apartment by two men armed with a knife, and robbed early Saturday morning, Garrett said.

At 12:50 a.m. Saturday, the victim had just left his Campus Edge apartment when the two men attacked him. They threw him to the ground and beat him in the face several times. The victim was then forced back into his apartment with a knife at his throat. Once inside the beating continued.

The suspects took money and jewelry and fled on foot. The victim was taken to TMRMC, treated and released.

Teen takes tumble on Tennessee

A 15-year-old boy was struck by a car on Tennessee Street as he tried to cross the street during rush hour traffic Friday afternoon, Garrett said Saturday.

Jaidani Murphy, 15, of 1571 Paul Russel Road, crossed the first two lanes of West Tennessee Street before being struck by a 1982 Datsun driven by Oliver Nowokoh, 33, of 2125 Jackson Bluff Road. Murphy was crossing against the pedestrian signal.

Murphy was thrown onto the front of the Datsun, rolled over the roof and fell back onto the asphalt. He was taken to TMRMC. His injuries were not life threatening and he was treated and released. TPD's traffic homicide unit is continuing the investigation.

'I am an environmentalist. And I always have been, and I always will be.'

—George Bush in a 1988 speech campaigning for the presidency

Environmental Resume '92

Name: George Herbert Walker Bush

Objective: To become the Environmental Terrorism President.

Special skills: Ability to completely obscure the public's understanding of environmental issues and policy by means of empty rhetoric, intentionally misleading Orwellian doublespeak and slick photo op-style public relations ploys.

Qualifications

- Convinced the majority of the American public of my environmental sincerity by ostensibly re-strengthening the Clean Air Act early in my first term. I then effectively failed to act on many of the act's guidelines and regulations.

- Just recently my administration, with the impetus of my vice president, Dan Quayle, decided to allow industry to increase pollution emissions without public hearings. Much of the public doesn't even realize this is in direct contradiction of the Clean Air Act that I so often tout as an example of my "greenness." Message? That'll teach them to watch Murphy Brown instead of the news.

- Allowed my Interior Secretary, Manuel Lujan, to permit logging on 1,700 federal acres in Oregon inhabited by the northern spotted owl and to then provide only about half of the amount of land outlined by the Endangered Species Act as necessary for the owl's survival. Message? Whoooo cares?

- Showed my Big Oil colors by pushing (albeit unsuccessfully so far) for the opening of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska to oil excavation. Message? Read my oil slicks.

- Promised during the campaign for my first term in office that there would be "no net loss of wetlands." However, I nearly pulled off a plan that would have narrowed the definition of "wetland" and allowed for the development of millions of acres of these lands, so crucial to ecological well-being. Unfortunately, this potential coup was leaked to the press and I had to shelve the idea.

- Managed to swindle some into thinking I made a tough decision to take part in the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro during an election year, but made it clear to Summit leaders I had no intention of signing a treaty that would decrease the amount of ozone-destroying carbons released into the atmosphere.

During the Summit I also showed world leaders who's King of the First World Hill by refusing to sign a treaty that would prevent the extinction of plants and animals—even when every other industrialized nation represented signed the treaty. They all hate me now, but I always was a rugged individualist. Message: not an environmentalist wimp, fate of the earth be damned.

Considering my qualifications in this area I feel I am highly qualified to represent the American people as "Environmental Terrorism President" in 1992. Message?

VOTE George Herbert Walker Bush.

Alternative Summit: First World can learn from indigenous peoples

BY RICHARD RIVERS

PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

RIO DE JANEIRO—A week before the world's leaders gathered here to discuss the future of the environment, delegates from the one real planetary tribe held their own summit.

The World Conference of Indigenous Peoples on Territory, Environment and Development drew several hundred participants from 26 countries and five continents—blond, blue-eyed Saamis from Sweden and Norway, Kayapo Indians from the Brazilian Amazon, ponytailed Apache and Zuni tribespeople from the American Southwest, chieftains from Nigeria.

Meeting in a specially constructed village on rolling green meadows 30 miles from downtown Rio, they spent a week hammering out an Earth Charter, a list of demands to be presented at the Rio Summit. Key planks included calls for political and economic autonomy, and the creation of a special United Nations Conservation Fund, to be directed by native peoples.

But while focusing on their own survival needs as among the world's most marginalized peoples, delegates claimed a wider responsibility as the earth's stewards.

"We want ... to apply our wisdom not in Indian reserves, but in white reserves, which have been completely destroyed," said Marcos Terena, coordinator of the Brazil-based Intertribal Committee, which organized the event.

James Enote, a Zuni Indian from New Mexico, spoke for many when he called the ecological disaster faced by the world a product of a "spiritual crisis."

"The Europeans conquered, took what they needed and destroyed the environment. Now, everyone is looking to us for answers."

For all the shared recognition of environmental threats, however, the five-day conference reflected many of the same rifts—North/South, male/female, urban/rural—that divide delegates at the Earth summit.

Like many overseas participants, Australia's head delegate, Clarrie Isaacs, networked easily with the press and stayed at an air-conditioned hotel at Copacabana. Meanwhile, most of the Indians from the South American rainforest were housed in communal huts with thatched roofs and plastic tarp covering the sides.

Beatrice Pain Iquao, a Mapuche Indian from Chile who is helping to organize a meeting of indigenous women next year, raised the issue of sexism. "Our people have absorbed new 'machismo' customs that are not traditional," she complained, noting that women were underrepresented at the conference. But most delegates, including other women, considered her position "too feminist."

By far the deepest countercurrents to emerge sprang from the gap between the city and the countryside. For those from cities, where more and more indigenous people now live, the paramount issue is economic survival. Urban delegates thus emphasized the need for expanded housing and medical care for slum dwellers.

But for those from the countryside, the paramount issue is preserving their land, which they see as crucial to their physical and cultural survival. "If we can't control our territory, then we can't preserve our language and cultures," argued Leif Halonen of the Nordic Saami Council—representing some 100,000 Lapps whose tiny communities are scattered throughout Sweden, Norway, Finland and Russia.

Avanhevinga, chief of a village of 1,600 Kiowas in western Brazil, told delegates the loss of ancestral lands and forced migration to surrounding towns has set off a suicide wave that has claimed 102 tribe members since 1985.

First World delegates "are richer than we are but they are first of all Indians," said the chief. "We hope they can pressure their governments to protect our people."

A priority for many threatened rain forest tribes—but of far less direct importance to urban dwellers—is the controversial issue of intellectual property rights, or patents, for natural medicines, fertilizers, oils and other products discovered by native peoples.

Darrel Posey, an American ethnobiologist who has long worked in the Brazilian Amazon, said even remote tribes need a source of income because an isolated life in the forest is no longer possible. "Granting intellectual property rights can make it profitable to defend the forest," he said.

Even the organization of the meeting, which was mostly handled by Brazilian Indians, highlighted certain differences, this time of a cultural variety.

"We in Europe usually have an agenda prepared beforehand," remarked Halonen, sounding a bit like an Oslo banker. "Here there is just a lot of discussion and everything starts at least 90 minutes late."

Despite differences in priorities, plans for a follow-up gathering are already being drafted, spurred by the delegates' sense of urgency over their environmental mission.

"If the earth is left to the whites they will destroy it completely," said Evaristo Nunkuo, head of the Indigenous Organizations of the Amazon Basin, which represents 450 tribes from five South American nations. "We must have an important role in planning the future of the planet."

Being the parents of a son paralyzed in a car accident is difficult enough. But living an ocean away from him makes things even more complicated.

Bruce Ofuani

came to Tallahassee from Nigeria to care for him.

At the time of the accident earlier this year, Patrick had no health insurance and only minimal car insurance. And his parents, who arrived in Tallahassee in March, are not eligible for work in this country because they hold only temporary visas. Christopher and Felicia Ehikhuemen have assumed many of the duties of a private duty nurse for their son, a necessity they cannot afford.

"He is our son and we want to help him in any way possible," Christopher Ehikhuemen said. "Where we come from, family, friends and others are important to us. We believe in helping others in any way that we can."

When Patrick's parents arrived, they encountered many of the problems common to parents in similar situations. Because the younger Ehikhuemen is an adult, his parents are not eligible to stay at the Ronald McDonald House, which provides housing to parents of hospitalized children. They initially stayed at a motel, but knew that they could not absorb the expense for the many months they knew they would have to stay.

Tallahassee's African community has rallied behind the Ehikhuemen family. The Nigerian Union of North Florida has secured housing for the parents with the assistance of Yaw Owusu, a Florida A&M professor from Ghana. The group is now paying for the family's housing expenses.

Renting an apartment for the Ehikhuemens has relieved some of the family's financial burden, according to Bruce Ofuani, Social Secretary of the Nigerian Union.

"The apartment is less expensive than a motel, but the cost is high over the long period of time that the family must stay," Ofuani said.

At this time, the family doesn't know how long Patrick will need to stay in the hospital or how long his rehabilitation will take. His father said they would not take him home to Nigeria because of inadequate health care facilities there.

Patrick Ehikhuemen is currently scheduled to be transferred within the next few days to the Rehabilitation Institute of West Florida in Pensacola. His parents plan to accompany him for what will be a stay of at least eight weeks.

Once there, they will again be ineligible for housing provided to the parents of younger children. To assist Patrick and his family, the Nigerian Union has established an account on their behalf.

"We are soliciting donations from 1 cent to $100,000," Ofuani said. "The Nigerian Union looks at Patrick as a member of our family and community and we hope to help (the family) in any way possible, including helping the parents to stay here as long as they are needed."

After at least eight weeks of rehabilitation in Pensacola, Ehikhuemen will return to Tallahassee for further treatment. According to Dr. Carl Lowder, his physician, Ehikhuemen is responding well to treatment and his prognosis for survival is good.

"His main problem is that he needs extensive rehabilitation," Lowder said.

According to Ofuani, the most difficult part of the Ehikhuemen's stay in Pensacola will be the lack of support systems that have been available to him here in Tallahassee.

"They have had a great deal of support in Tallahassee. Over there, I don't know what support systems will be available," he said.

After his rehabilitation and recovery are complete, Ehikhuemen plans to return to TCC, where he is a business administration major. He then plans to continue his studies at FAMU.

The Nigerian Union's activities are not limited to donating and soliciting funds for members of their community. According to Ofuani, the group sponsors a number of social, cultural and educational activities, culminating in a Nigerian Independence Day every October. While most members are professionals, the group also includes students and provides support to African student groups in Tallahassee.

Donations on behalf of Patrick Ehikhuemen and his family can be sent to the Nigerian Union of North Florida, Inc., P.O. Box 20192, Tallahassee FL 32316 or the union's account at the Barnett Bank of Tallahassee, 2930 Apalachee Parkway, Tall., FL 32301.

In addition to monetary donations, donations of household goods and utensils will be appreciated.

PANAMA CITY, Panama—Panamanian authorities Sunday found the still smoldering remains of a plane that disappeared shortly leaving Panama City. All 47 people aboard were believed killed, a news report said.

Wreckage from the 737-200 was first spotted near the Panamanian border with Columbia by a Channel Four TV crew who were combing the area by helicopter.

Reporter Ciro Ortega said there did not appear to be any survivors among the 40 passengers and seven crew. Thirty-five of the missing passengers were Colombian, two were Panamanian, two were from the United States and one was Italian, according to airline records.

MEDELLIN, Columbia—Five people were killed and eight more were injured when a group of men burst into a bar near Medellin and sprayed the room with bullets, police said Sunday.

The dead men were meeting in the "El Carriel" bar just south of Columbia's drug capitol Medellin, 160 miles south of the capitol Bogota, when the unidentified gunmen entered the bar and fired volleys from Ingram sub-machine guns.

Police said the attackers escaped from the bar and no one has claimed responsibility for the attack.

DHAKA, Bangladesh—One person was stabbed to death and more than 100 injured Sunday during violent clashes between rival soccer fans in the Bangladesh League.

The clashes occurred at the city's largest stadium in the Mirpur borough, turning a major residential district of the capitol into a battlefield for nearly two hours.

Hospital officials said the dead had multiple stab wounds while dozens with stab injuries were streaming into the hospital well into the night.

CAMP DAVID, Md.—President Bush and British Prime Minister John Major sought to minimize their differences Sunday over a biological treaty being signed at the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, with the administration opposing it and the British favoring it.

Appearing at a brief news conference after their one-day meeting, Bush said that he would not be "apologetic" for refusing to sign the treaty protecting the world's delicate species and said his administration had a strong environmental record.

Major noted, "We have problems with the biodiversity convention as well as the United States." But he added, "I think we'll probably be able to solve them."

Bush remained less confident and said the United States was a world leader in environmental protection.

Bush also expressed the hope that democracy would be "reinstalled" in Haiti.

"Our major concern is that democracy has been overthrown at a time when there is an inexorable movement toward democracy" in the hemisphere, he said, adding "It sets a bad example."

But he added, "I'm not thinking about force and troops at this point."

LOS ANGELES—City leaders, caught off guard by Police Chief Daryl Gates' threat to delay his retirement, scrambled Sunday for an appropriate response, including possibly firing the chief and reducing his pension.

Should Gates elect to stay on the job, a quirk in the City Charter could nullify the appointment of former Philadelphia Police Commissioner Willie Williams, who was named Gates' replacement and was scheduled to take over as L.A.'s top cop July 1.

The civilian Police Commission, in an emergency Sunday meeting, voted unanimously to ask the City Council to allow them to appoint and pay for a private attorney to advise the panel on what course of action to take should Gates carry through with the threat. The City Council is scheduled to meet Tuesday.

CHICAGO—The United Methodist Church of Illinois is joining the effort to keep a proposed $2 billion casino gambling complex out of Chicago, a published report said Sunday.

Crain's Chicago Business said the organization consisting of 1,500 Methodist churches across the state has launched a lobbying campaign to pressure state lawmakers to kill any legislation that would allow land-based casino gambling.

CAPE CANAVERAL—An unmanned Delta 2 rocket boosted a $214 million NASA astronomy satellite into orbit Sunday to study high-energy ultraviolet radiation from deep space, research expected to shed light on how the sun works.

Roaring with power, the 123-foot Delta 2 thundered to life at 12:40 p.m. and quickly streaked away from the Cape Canaveral Air Force Station, three days late because of ground processing problems last week and stormy weather Saturday.

Once off the pad, it was clear sailing as the slender rocket, bought from the Air Force for $46 million, put on a spectacular afternoon skyshow for thousands of local residents and tourists enjoying a sunny day at area beaches.

at irradiation facilities have led to the contamination of public property, workers, civilians and the environment, said Michael Colby, national director of Food and Water.

In 1988, employees at a Decatur, Ga., plant that irradiated medical supplies were exposed to radiation and 25,000 gallons of water turned "hot" when the steel rods containing cobalt-60, the radiation source used in food irradiation, corroded.

"The costs of such clean-ups far exceed any tangible benefits from the process," said Colby. "In addition, the benefits are questionable in the face of often cheaper, safer and more effective alternatives."

For local consumer and environmental activist Ed Deaton, the anti-irradiation argument is a distrust of nuclear power in general as well as a questioning of the transportation of the radiation source.

"You can take a look at the nuclear power industry and you can see a variety of tests that indicate a certain exposure level is safe," Deaton said. "Then somebody else does a study and it turns out that the results are exactly opposite of those studies that came out of 'industry.'"

"Plus they transport this (cobalt-60) around. It doesn't take much of that stuff spread around to be a serious hazard," he added.

Colby's organization will continue to be vocal about its concerns over food irradiation technology, he said.

"Food irradiation has been promoted by either the (Department of Energy) or by entrepreneurs who stand to make a considerable profit if food irradiation is ever accepted," Colby said. "A technology such as this should not be utilized until its absolute safety is determined. Both the short and the long term costs are too high."

How it works

In addition to cobalt-60, cesium-137 is sometimes mentioned as a gamma ray source for irradiation. It is one of the fission products contained in used fuel rods from nuclear power plants and must be extracted in reprocessing plants before it can be used as a radiation source. But presently, almost all irradiation facilities in the world use cobalt-60 rather than cesium-137, according to a United Nations World Health Organization report.

Food irradiation facilities are relatively simple in their design. In a typical set-up, the radiation source is contained in pencil-thin rods with each rod holding about 10,000 curies of radiation. The rods are submerged in a well of water and the whole area housing the gamma source is shielded with 6 to 8 feet of concrete.

The products to be irradiated, such as fruits, vegetables and poultry, travel on a conveyor belt to the source, which is raised out of the water on cables when needed. The dose of radiation received depends on the time of exposure and also the product's distance from the source.

There are 140 industrial irradiators in 40 countries, used mostly for sterilizing medical supplies, although 29 of them are used part time to irradiate food and to conduct food-related research. If Food and Water's assertion that the U.S. government has plans to allow 1,000 such facilities to be built is true, it could be a tough sell to the public.

Fearful consumers

Nearly 75 percent of the U.S. population view the process as a hazard, according to a Louis-Harris poll conducted from 1984 to 1986. Even supporters of the controversial method believe getting the public to swallow the idea will not be easy.

In 1990, Fred Shank, director of the FDA's Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition, told the annual meeting of the Institute of Food Technology that "consumer acceptance of irradiation as a treatment for foods is showing only minimal positive change, at best."

According to Shank, the greatest concern about the process is its perceived association with radioactivity and nuclear power.

Anti-irradiation activists agree with that assessment and even play off the fear in their attempts to halt the future construction of plants.

Why irradiation?

Advocates of the process point to a 1987 World Health Organization report on food irradiation that contradicts such claims. According to WHO, cobalt-60 is not a waste product from the nuclear industry. The report designates it as specifically manufactured for use in radiotherapy, sterilization of medical products and food irradiation.

But opponents argue that the notion of a food irradiation industry acts only as a dangerous argument for advocates of nuclear energy.

"Food irradiation was the brainchild of the Atomic Energy Commission's efforts in the Eisenhower administration to find practical uses for the flood of radioactive wastes from nuclear weapons," said Colby of Food & Water. "This process could play a central role in the efforts of the nuclear industry and the federal government—specifically the Department of Energy and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission—to revive the dying nuclear energy option and to help 'solve' nuclear waste problems."

Others tend to agree with Colby's charges.

"I wonder if this is just some ploy to market the waste," said Deaton. "We don't have a satisfactory waste storage facility in the United States."

Chamber Music ensemble out of tune in Summer Repertory's production

BY CHRIS PARKER

STAFF WRITER

There are times when you wonder if the play you're watching was written on this planet, so alien is the sense of humor and idea of plotting. And you ask yourself, is it me, am I missing something, or is it that there is nothing to miss? Posing these and other questions is the Arthur Kopit play Chamber Music, a part of FSU's Summer Repertory.

Florida Flambeau review

The premise seems promising enough—seven women in a mental hospital think they are Mozart's wife (Kristina Chamberlain), Gertrude Stein (Susan Oliff), Amelia Earhart (Heather Hutson), Susan B. Anthony (Ellen Sigel), Joan of Arc (Darlene Keleher), jungle explorer Susan O'Connor (Laura Rhodes), and movie star Pearl White (Lynn Chester).

Each has a characteristic costume and prop, and they have their own idiosyncratic joke. Joan of Arc complains about her armor getting rusty. Gertrude Stein stutters and assaults the others with stupid rhymes ("Joan of Arc died in the dark."). Pearl White acts like an airhead. Mozart's wife keeps putting on Don Giovanni.

They argue amongst each other, perform their schtick, and eventually turn against one of the characters. There may be a theme in here, about the oppression of women, or how society turns women against each other, but if there is, it's lost among the repetitious, remarkably humorless antics of the characters.

Friday's show opened a little flat, and failed to develop dramatically from there. Throughout the performance there was a section of six to eight theatre students laughing, seemingly, at the oddest times. But considering the consensual nature of reality, I can still say with some assurance that the play is not funny.

It's possible that given a manic treatment, with closer attention to the lines and a floor plan meant to dizzy the audience with movement and characters at cross-purposes, something could be made of this. As is, it's a bizarre play of strange people doing strange things that are at best incidentally amusing.

The strongest performances belong to Hutson, as Earhart, the only sane character, and Rhodes, whose over-the-top take on a famous African explorer begets an occasional chuckle.

Chamber Music is preceded by a 15-minute curtain raiser, The Prodigal Son, written by radio personality Garrison Keillor. It's an amusing re-creation of the Biblical story of a spendthrift son who wastes his fortune on wine and women. Silly and irreverent, it features fine jobs by Jerry Genochio as the father, David Belisle as the hardworking, underappreciated son Dwight, and Joseph Catanzariti as the happy-go-lucky prodigal.

Chamber Music shows Tuesday and Friday nights at 8, and Saturday night at 11. General Admission is $5, or free with your validated FSU ID. For additional dates and ticket information, call 644-6500.

Reading series serves up lit with a definite twist this Tuesday

BY DARRYL DOKSTADER

FLAMBEAU WRITER

Performance art and poetry combine to juice up the Florida State English Department Summer Reading Series Tuesday night at the Grand Finale.

Local poet P. V. LeForge will read selections from his recently published book and Susan Taylor will offer a controversial performance piece exploring women's issues.

LeForge originally came to Tallahassee as a student. After receiving a master's degree in creative writing, he decided to stay in town, and opened the Paperback Rack, a store dealing in new and used books. His interest and scholarship in literature served as the springboard for creating his business.

"I just happened to have a lot of books around," LeForge said in a recent interview. "I'd worked in retail many times before and I thought that if I was going to continue in retail, I'd combine that with my love of books."

LeForge will be reading poems from The Secret Life of Moles, recently released through Anhinga Press, a local publisher. LeForge described his poetry as "a little bit quirky," and as a vehicle for "touching on serious subjects in ways that are a little bit easier to swallow than some other poets." LeForge is also the author of a book of short stories entitled The Principle of Interchange and recently had poems published in the cultural quarterly DIS.

Susan Taylor is no stranger to the Tuesday night reading scene, having appeared several times during her career at FSU. This Tuesday night, however, she abandons the more traditional structures of the readings to venture into performance art.

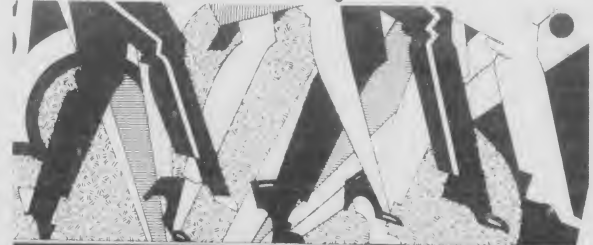

Taylor's presentation will include co-performances by Karen Janowsky (who read last Tuesday), Gretchen Comba and Susan Richardson, and will make use of three simultaneously played videotapes. Her piece is called Against Quilting, For Kneading: Re (Envisioning Women's Obligations to Each Other). Taylor described it as an "anarchistic action piece," in an interview last week.

"There will be three different videos going on the same theme," she said. "There will be repeated images on all three of them, concerning different facets of women's experiences in Western culture."

Taylor cites "quilting" as a traditional metaphor for the female experience, insofar as women are viewed as bringing disparate things together. She uses images in popular culture to explore this theme. The videos will respectively explore the cultural roots of rape, obscenity and fashion.

P. V. LeForge and Susan Taylor entertain the literary masses Tuesday at the Grand Finale.

Club Downunder gets groovy Wednesday night

BY MICK BUCHANAN

SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

For the easiest method of arriving without traveling, expand your mind to the exponential, free-form rock of Johari Window and Tao Jones Wednesday night at the Club Downunder in the latest installment of Student Campus Entertainment's Summer Music Series.

Johari Window is definitely a working band, averaging five to six gigs a week throughout the region. They've not only played in almost every watering hole in Tallahassee but have also traveled to Gainesville, Pensacola, Athens, Ga., and Valdosta, Ga. Johari Window has expanded their songlist to include 14 original songs and a multitude of classic rock covers, including an entire Grateful Dead tribute show, as well as a Pink Floyd set that rivals local Floydists Slapstick's. The percussion section has recently acquired some new drums, incorporating tablas and an African Djembe drum.

Johari Window's lineup includes Ken Raduazzo on lead guitar and vocals, Brian Burgess on bass and vocals, David Pickett on rhythm guitar and vocals, Brian Carey on drums and percussion, and Joe Williams on drums and percussion. All the members met as students at Florida State.

Tao Jones is a trio made up of two mainstays, guitarist and vocalist Larry McCraw and drummer Stu Potlock, with a sort of bassist du jour arrangement. Dead Men Rule's Kevin Khan will do the honors Wednesday night. Tao Jones is a Tallahassee mainstay, having formed in 1989 and debuting at that year's infamous "Pepper Drive Tune-Up." The band plays mostly originals, with a few choice eclectic covers, such as "Reefer Man" by Cab Calloway.

Johari Window and Tao Jones trip the light fantastic Wednesday night at the Club Downunder. Music starts at 9:30 and is over by midnight. This event is 18-plus and is free to all.

ARTS BRIEFS

The Gallery at the Florida State Conference Center, 555 W. Pensacola St., is the site of an exhibit of color wood engravings by Salvador Dali illustrating Dante's poem "The Divine Comedy" beginning today and continuing through June 26. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Call 644-3801 for more information.

'Tis the season for poetry contests, evidently. In addition to the two we told you about last week, add this: The National Library of Poetry will award $12,000 in prizes this year to over 250 poets in the North American Open Poetry Contest. The deadline for entry is June 30, and the contest is open to everyone and—best of all, y'all—there is no entry fee! To enter, send one (not two or three or even minus one, just ONE) original poem, any subject and any style, to the National Library of Poetry, 11419 Cronridge Dr., P.O. Box 704-ZG, Owings Mills, MD 21117. The poem should be no more than 20 lines, and the poet's name and address should appear (as if by magic) on the top of the page.

HOROSCOPE

Jeanne Dixon's

MONDAY, JUNE 8, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your diligence will bring a big pay-off. In September redouble your efforts to reach a coveted career goal. Mixing business with pleasure produces wonderful results in late fall. Transitional events make December an exhilarating period for your personal life. Take a new direction in romance early in 1993. Creative ventures will greatly expand your horizons next spring. Embrace original ideas.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: first lady Barbara Bush, comedian Joan Rivers, country singer Boz Scaggs, Justice Byron White.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Hold on to your ideals. Do not allow distractions or daydreams to deter you from your long-range goals. Emphasize quality over quantity when selecting projects.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): See what the day brings before you make any major moves. Be prudent to avoid upsetting your closest ally. A good credit rating and nice possessions often impress those who lack them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Go ahead and use your intelligence if trying to accomplish something of vital importance. A love relationship could have you thinking seriously about settling down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Once you get rid of certain distractions, it will be easy to buckle down to work. A new friend could join your social circle under quite unusual circumstances. Roll out the red carpet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Continue to pursue yesterday's agreeable occupations. Complete old business before launching a bold new plan. Keep a watchful eye out this evening to protect your property.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your instincts help you capitalize on a special social situation. Try to maintain your objectivity if petty annoyances surface. Weigh your words carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The work week commences on a highly optimistic note. It's full steam ahead for your career ambitions! If you act quickly, you can profit from an innovative money-making scheme.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Suspicions concerning a friend or financial deal could make you edgy this morning. From afternoon on, it is clear sailing for a community project.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21): Your enthusiasm this morning could stem from your financial involvement in a community activity. Curb a tendency to act pompous when on the defensive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone's personal shortcomings could strain a business relationship. There are certain advantages to staying out of the spotlight. Take advantage of a subtle ploy to advance your prestige.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A last-minute change of plans could cause disappointment. Count 10 before saying what you really think or you may have to forgo the company of a visitor. Play a waiting game.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A promising day at work for those who keep their cool. A troubling situation could find you at odds with a coworker. In love relationships, balance sensitivity to others needs with independence.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are both ambitious and very popular with their peers. Their love of life and competitive spirit are greatly admired by more timid souls. Count on these bright youngsters to graduate at the top of their class. To them, a good education is their passport to success. Restless by nature, these Gemini's thrive on change. New people and challenges energize them. A "live-and-let-live" attitude helps them get along with people of all ages. They are sympathetic listeners and generous hosts.

Swingers on the south side of town are taking advantage of mechanical devices that are guaranteed to find their zone every time.

No matter how fast you like it, the pitching machines of Batters-Up, Inc. at 1425 S. Adams St. deliver with amazing accuracy.

Whether you're a slow-pitch softball player, Little League slugger, or an aspiring big leaguer looking to face the likes of a Nolan Ryan, Batters-Up is serving up strikes to local baseball and softball enthusiasts of all varieties.

"At lunchtime, we get businessmen in suits out here, taking off their neckties. Sometimes ladies come out in dresses. It's pretty funny," said Gene Paoline, a hitting instructor at the cages. Paoline also plays center field and pitches for the Reds, of the newly formed National Adult Baseball Association.

The six machines cost 50 cents for 12 pitches. Or, for $5, you can face a steady succession of pitches for 15 minutes. In addition to two slow-pitch softball machines, the four baseball machines spit out fastballs ranging in speed from 35 to 80 mph.

Although Batters-Up attracts a vast assortment of curiosity seekers, owner Booth Riera says the facility does serve a purpose.

"We're not just a recreation center," she said. "We're an athletic training facility. A lot of kids are not superstars. By coming to us, we are able to move them into the range of consistent hitters, build confidence (and) improve sportsmanship."

Later this month, Batters-Up will offer classes designed to aid stance, swing, weight distribution and power.

The Batters-Up cages are generally open from February through June. The busiest months are March and April, when the youth baseball league's regular season overlaps with Tallahassee's adult softball league.

Byron, an 11-year-old Little Major League all-star, took batting practice with some 55 mph pitches Friday evening. His mother gave him pointers from behind the chain-link back-stop.

"Watch your stance, Honey. Don't hit the ball on the handle. There ya go . . . beautiful!" she said, as he uncorked one into the net 45 feet away.

Meanwhile, Leo Young, a former catcher for the Tallahassee Community College baseball team was taking some swats at 80 mph fastballs in preparation for next year's Florida State baseball tryouts.

"Shoot man, I can't even blink that fast," blurted out one young onlooker.

"It's not really meant to develop your timing, per se. It's just good to get some balls flying at you," Young said, stepping from the cage.

Well, hopefully not exactly flying at you.

According to Riera, the machines, made by Master Pitching Machines, have a reputation for being the safest and most dependable on the market. Although there may be a slight variation in the flight of each pitch (due to the different amount of wear on each of the dimpled rubber balls), it will cross the plate somewhere in the strike zone.

Mike Richards, a pitcher for the NABA White Sox, says it's easier for a hitter to relax against the machine.

"It gives you a chance to face some major league heat without having to worry about the pitcher coming in and hitting you."

NBA FINALS
Bulls take Series lead

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

PORTLAND, Ore.—Michael Jordan scored 26 points and Chicago held Portland to 36 percent shooting from the floor Sunday night, lifting the Bulls to a 94-84 victory over the Trail Blazers in Game 3 of the NBA Finals.

The defending champion Bulls lead the series 2-1 after regaining the home-court advantage they lost by dropping Game 2 in overtime. Game 4 will be Wednesday night in Portland.

The Eastern Conference has won nine straight away games in the NBA Finals, dating to 1989. Chicago defeated the Los Angeles Lakers in three straight games at the Forum last season. Detroit won three straight at Portland in 1990 and the Pistons won two games at the Forum in 1989.

Besides Jordan, only Scottie Pippen and Horace Grant scored in double figures for Chicago. They scored 18 apiece.

The loss spoiled a big game for the Blazers' Clyde Drexler, who scored 32. But he received little help from his teammates.

Waves roll home to Malibu with College World Series title

OMAHA, Neb.—The Pepperdine Waves and the California State-Fullerton Titans played for bragging rights of southern California on Saturday. They also played for a national championship.

The Waves and the Titans, whose campuses are just 40 miles apart, met for the first time this year in the biggest game of the collegiate baseball season; with Pepperdine taking a 3-2 decision for the College World Series championship.

"Their pitching and defense cut down our momentum," Cal State-Fullerton coach Augie Garrido said after the game. "And it cut down our chances to win."

Pepperdine pitchers Patrick Ahearne, Derek Wallace and Steve Montgomery held Fullerton, a team with a .322 average, to just four singles.

Ahearne, an All-American who shut out Wichita State in the opening round, allowed just one unearned run to move his record to 15-2.

The Waves got off to a good start by scoring two runs in the top of the first. The Titans then closed to within 3-2 in the eighth inning. They had a chance to tie it but were robbed on a great play by Pepperdine second baseman Steve Rodriguez to end the inning.

"Steve just made an unbelievable play," Wave coach Andy Lopez said. "Once again we came through in a clutch situation."

The 1992 series was one full of firsts. It was Pepperdine's first appearance and its first championship. It was the first time teams from the same state met for the championship. And Fullerton third baseman Phil Nevin became the first MVP from a losing team since University of Minnesota alumn Dave Winfield in 1973.

"I would trade the award for the rings those guys will be wearing any time," Nevin said. "You can't carry a trophy around."

The series also set records for total attendance, average attendance and attendance for a championship game.

For Pepperdine, the seventh seed, it was a storybook ending. But for Fullerton, the ending had a different twist.

"We're bitterly disappointed," Garrido said. "But we're not surprised. They are the national champions and we're not."

Oil drilling is still a threat to Panhandle

BY SUE MULLINS

STAFF WRITER

The U.S. Congress voted last week to place a 10-year moratorium on leasing waters along the Florida coastline for oil and gas exploration, but environmentalists warn the bill doesn't go far enough to protect the state's waters—especially in north Florida, where the legislation doesn't ban drilling on 200 leases currently in existence.

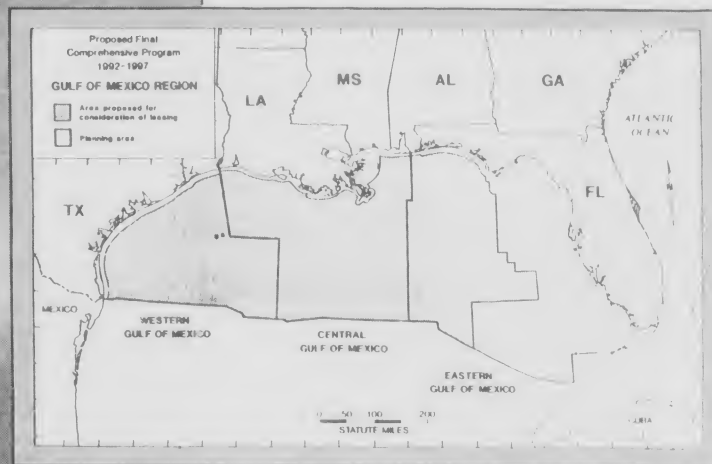

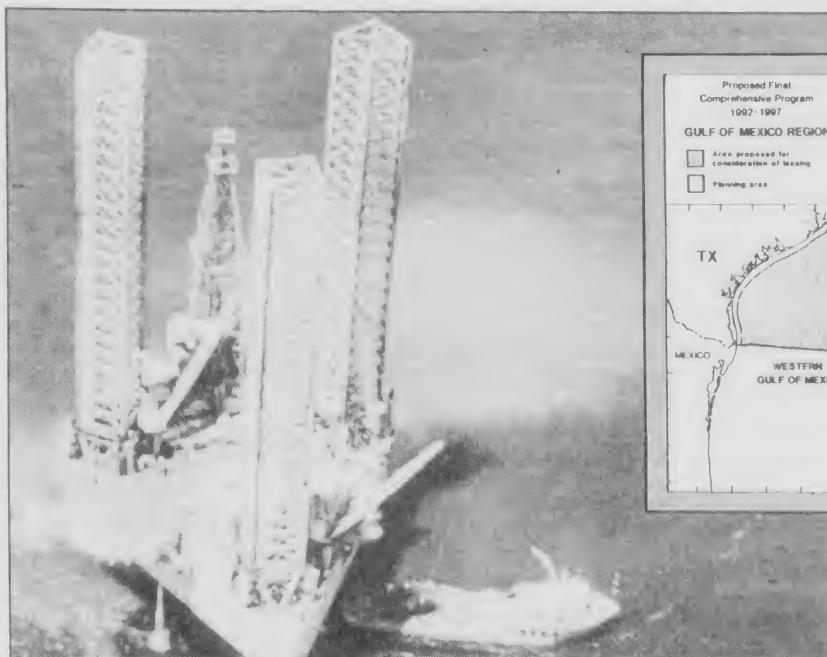

Tom DeRocco, chief of public affairs for the U.S. Department of the Interior's Minerals Management Service, said Florida has many deposits of natural gas that could be tapped. The federal government would take, at most, 200 three-mile-by-three-mile blocks for lease in an area reaching south of the Florida Panhandle to the Keys. Those areas of exploration would be no closer than 10 miles to the shoreline, he said.

"We try to take into consideration the special characteristics of an area when we propose it for leasing," DeRocco said from his Washington, D.C. office last week. "And while Floridians are concerned for the impact oil exploration would have on the tourist industry, they have to keep in mind that those tourists have to get down there and travel around the state somehow."

"(Tourists) are using energy and it has to come from someplace," he continued. "One place it comes from is offshore of the U.S."

But environmentalists disagree with DeRocco's assessment, charging that the routine pollution oil rigs produce, not to mention the chance of a spill from an oil tanker, is enough to warrant banning exploration off Florida's and many other coasts.

"Offshore drilling is a high-risk polluting business," said Ann Whitfield, executive director of the Florida Public Interest Environmentalists say offshore oil rigs like this one pictured off the coast of Louisiana can endanger marine life in the area. Above: This map shows which areas of the Gulf of Mexico are currently proposed for leasing by oil companies.

Research Group, which has fought to prevent drilling off Florida's coast. "The routine pollution from the dumping of drilling muds and cuttings (the chemical compounds used to lubricate drill bits and maintain its pressure) and dumping the mix of brine, oil and gas too contaminated to be of commercial interest, are out and-out pollutants to the water."

The Lands Act

The House bill, a part of the new Comprehensive National Energy Policy Act, is the companion to a Senate version that passed in February. Referred to as the Outer Continental Shelf Bill, supporters say the legislation places nearly the entire coastline of the United States, except for most of Alaska and the Gulf of Mexico west of the Florida state line, under a leasing moratorium until 2002.

"The provisions in the bill provide for no new leasing in any other area besides the Central and Western Gulf of Mexico and most of Alaska for 10 years," said Dan Ashe, a staffer for the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives.

"The bill also provides for the buy-back from oil companies like Mobil and Chevron some 73 leases in Florida, north and west of the Florida Keys, but it doesn't restrict drilling in other areas already leased in Florida," he added. "Basically, this means the Department of the Interior will have to go back to the drawing board in regards to their proposed five-year OCS plan."

Lesbian and gay film fest on despite protests

BY SUE MULLINS

A second attempt by a group of citizens to thwart the Lesbian and Gay Film Festival at the Leon County Public Library failed by a unanimous decision of the library's advisory board Tuesday, and similar protests later in the evening failed to convince county commissioners to ban the festival or review library policy.

In unanimous votes Friday and Tuesday night, the advisory board voted to go ahead with the planned film festival, despite protests from local groups and individuals that the films are obscene.

At its regular Tuesday meeting, the County Commission defeated Commissioner Don Price's motion to ban the festival by a 4 to 2 vote.

Commissioner Manny Joanos joined Price in support of the ban, while Commissioners Gary Jordan, Anita Davis and Gayle Nelson voted along with Commission Chair Marjorie Turnbull to allow the videos to be shown. Commissioner Lee Vause was absent.

The festival will include four short videos that contain homosexual images and stories that will air Monday, June 15 in the library's Auditorium A.

"These films, one of which was shown on PBS last fall, are not at all X-rated, they simply present some positive images for the gay community," festival co-sponsor

Not a Good Year for mechanics

BY CHE ODOM
STAFF WRITER

Two more employees of the Goodyear Tallahassee Tire Company were arrested Wednesday afternoon for attempting to sell unnecessary automotive repairs.

According to Michelle McLawhorn, of the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, the charges stem from an ongoing investigation with the State Attorney's Office.

Jimmy Johnson, manager of the Tallahassee Tire store located at 1818 Capital Circle N.E., was charged with one count of felony grand theft. Also charged with grand theft was Jackie Hightower, a technician at the same service center.

The April 2 arrests of George Johnson of 1500 Apalachee Parkway Store and Wesley Russell of the Capital Circle N.E. store followed 52 written complaints filed by consumers. Their arrests prompted 48 additional written complaints to DOACS against the company, leading to Tuesday's arrests.

The DOACS began an investigation last month involving a customer who believed the Tallahassee Tire store on Capital Circle N.E. tried to sell him several new parts including a head gasket, costing $550, unnecessarily.

Investigators claim that the store's actions were fraudulent and that a new head gasket was not needed. Warrants for both George Johnson and Russell were then sought.

Gary Johnson, of the Goodyear Tallahassee Tire Company, said Wednesday the gasket incident was an isolated, understandable mistake. He said that the incident and the four arrests don't represent any deceptive practice in the store's past.

"We don't think this was big," Johnson said. "In this particular case it was just a misdiagnosis. The mechanic who is certified and a manager believed that was what was wrong."

"I still haven't heard what they think was really wrong," he added.

TCC student attacked

A Tallahassee Community College student was attacked in her home Monday night while she read in her bedroom. Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Annette Garrett said Tuesday.

At 11:40 p.m. Monday, the woman was in her east Tallahassee home and heard a noise, but she wasn't concerned because all of her doors and windows were locked.

About 15 minutes later a man appeared in her bedroom doorway. He rushed at the victim, jumped on top of her and began to strangle her. After a struggle, the man gave up and left the apartment. The woman was not physically injured.

The attacker was described as a 25- to 30-year-old Black man, five feet eight inches tall and weighing about 200 pounds. He was wearing a gray baseball shirt with blue sleeves and dark blue shorts. TPD - Sex Crimes Unit - is investigating this case.

Same guy, same clerk: Three times

A Suwannee Supply store was robbed Tuesday morning for the third time in nine months by the same suspect—and the same clerk was on duty each time, Garrett said Wednesday.

The clerk of the convenience store located at 415 E. Orange Ave. told officers that at 10 a.m. Tuesday she saw the suspect approaching the store and recognized him from two previous robberies. Fearing a third robbery, she pushed the robbery alarm before he even entered the store, but the alarm malfunctioned.

He went into the store and robbed it using a six-inch file knife. He was last seen running eastbound on Orange Avenue. The last robbery involving this man was May 29. Police have identified the suspect and are looking for him.

Drilling from page 1

The five year plan Ashe referred to is known as the Proposed Final Comprehensive Outer Continental Shelf Natural Gas and Oil Resource Management Program for 1992-1997. The program, proposed by the Department of the Interior's Minerals Management Service, is mandated by the OCS Lands Act. The Lands Act, in turn, mandates that the Department of the Interior outline the size, timing and location of potential offshore areas to be assessed for federal offshore natural gas and oil leasing, according to the MMS.

The five-year plan is slated to produce an estimated 10 trillion cubic feet of natural gas and 1 billion barrels of oil, representing net economic benefits of more than $5 billion to the nation. The program outlines 18 sale areas in portions of 11 planning areas, including the Gulf of Mexico, the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and particularly in the Alaska region.

Catastrophic possibilities

"The risk of a catastrophe, like an oil spill or explosion, would be devastating for our coast," Whitfield said of the plan to drill oil from the Gulf. "Two of the state's largest industries, tourism and fishing, would be devastated."

Furthermore, according to Whitfield, North Florida's marine ecosystem has not been as studied or understood as the rest of the state, and the effect of drilling for and piping in oil could irreparably harm the state's unique coastal environment.

"The sea life concerns in the Panhandle are very important because there (are) a lot of live bottom areas—outcroppings of growth on the floor—and a very rich marine life," Whitfield said. "The Department of the Interior pretends that tankering has nothing to do with drilling, but they have to transport the oil after they've extracted it. A pipeline will disrupt the marine habitat and the dredging up of the floor is especially harmful along the shoreline."

But the Interior Department's DeRocco argued the U.S. has never experienced a blowout or oil spill from offshore oil exploration, and that it is a safer method of energizing the country than importing foreign oil.

"I think the real risk from an environmental standpoint is the tankers bringing oil into this country," he said. "Tankering is an accident waiting to happen," he added. "It's more environmentally responsible to develop offshore oil and gas because 95 percent comes ashore via pipeline."

The 1000 Friends of Florida, a Tallahassee based state environmental watchdog, is also opposed to oil exploration in Florida, according to Executive Director Jim Murley.

"We have provided constant opposition to the leasing of Florida's waters for oil and gas exploration, as has Gov. (Lawton) Chiles. Our opposition is based on the tremendous risk the government is taking for so little an amount of oil and gas," Murley said Friday. "We'd much rather than use the financial resources to explore energy efficiency and conservation."

The amount of energy all the state's oil and gas would yield is enough to power the United States for less than three weeks, according to the latest available figures from the Interior Department. Even spokesman DeRocco admitted that the world's energy supply, not to mention Florida's, is finite.

"People get used to a certain lifestyle. They're just not willing to give up their private transportation or their air conditioning, but there will come a time when the oil and gas runs out," he said. "Those fuels should serve as a bridge to a time when alternative fuels are developed. You just can't stop using fossil fuels today though because of the economic and social chaos that would create."

But environmentalists argue that the risk of ecological disaster is not worth the small amount of oil and gas that would be extracted, so the cost of exploration would be better spent developing the alternatives to fossil fuels.

"Offshore oil drilling brings routine pollution as an inevitable by-product of doing business, and it only feeds our dependency on oil," said FPIRG's Whitfield. "Sacrificing Florida's coast to get out all the oil isn't really going to change the big picture—it will only provide a few days of energy. It's not going to solve the nation's energy problem but it could forever destroy Florida."

addition to the $164 million that has been cut in the past two years if the Legislature decides on a "no new taxes" budget during the special session.

"This is the reality of the situation," he said. "Losing $50 million should scare people. Unless funding is passed, we have to look at branch campuses."

However, FSU President Dale Lick vowed the Panama City campus will stay open.

"We are not discussing closing the campus," Lick said Wednesday. "We do not want to do it and it's not on our agenda."

Lick said the value of the branch campus goes beyond just classrooms and students.

"The campus is a major center for the entire community," Lick said. "It creates jobs, provides leadership and generally uplifts the quality of life."

Although Lick admitted there is a possibility the BOR will close the campus, he said the administration would do everything possible to prevent it, including absorbing cuts in other areas.

"We have positive plans for the campus, like expanding curricula," Lick said. "But if the bottom keeps falling out, they may close the campus, but it's not probable."

—Angela David, student at FSU Panama City campus

The university branches were targeted because the BOR is looking for efficiency and, as a whole, such campuses don't measure up to main campuses in that respect, according to Riordan.

"They (branch campuses) are notoriously wasteful," Riordan said. "Because of transportation costs and enrollment, they are more expensive to run."

Riordan added that in order to be efficient, a branch campus needs an enrollment of at least 2,000 students—a figure none of the branch campuses have achieved.

FSU Panama City has about 1,000 students enrolled during the spring and fall semesters, according to Paul Hailey, the Panama City Campus representative in the FSU student senate.

Students on campus said the effects of closure would be catastrophic since they would have to leave Panama City to finish their education.

"I would have to move to Tallahassee with only one year to go," said Angela David, a student at the Panama City campus. "It would uproot my family and job. It's very bad."

Hailey said most students at the campus take classes during the evening and many could not disrupt their careers to finish college at the main campus in Tallahassee. He added that closing the campus would be personally devastating to him as well.

"I'm one of the lucky ones who could probably move to Tallahassee," Hailey said. "But it would be much more expensive as far as tuition and living expenses. It may halt my education."

Hailey said students on the Panama City campus have started a drive to keep the campus open, including a rally last week and continuing letter writing drives to legislators and BOR members. And the FSU student senate in Tallahassee passed a resolution last Wednesday demanding the campus stay open.

Riordan encouraged this course of action.

"The students have a lot of strength and support to keep it open," Riordan said.

Congrats

It's not that often we praise the powers that be, but we just have to hand it to the Leon County Commission—in particular Commissioners Gary Yordon, Anita Davis, Gayle Nelson and Marjorie Turnbull—for refusing to be intimidated by the moralistic bullying tactics of the American Family Association.

The AFA, in the person of local representative and self-appointed community moral arbiter Randy Brien, wanted to stop the Leon County Public Library from allowing its facilities to be used by the Tallahassee Lesbian and Gay Film Festival. The festival, which will screen the bulk of its offerings at the United Church, will use a screening room at the library to show several videos, just as it did last year.

The AFA, which has a long history of harassing and opposing just about anything that portrays homosexuality as anything other than sinful, degenerate and perverted, had petitioned the Commission to disallow use of the library facilities after being turned down by the library advisory board.

After patiently listening to an hour or so of homophobic bigotry from those opposed to allowing the films to be shown—as well as from Commissioners Don Price and Manny Joanos—the Commission voted down the motion to censor the films and the people showing them.

The vote not to censor the films and the chosen lifestyle of gay men and women was also good for the tarnished image of the Leon County Library. In the past, former Director Sandra Wilson came under fire for removing photographs and a display by the Tallahassee Peace Coalition, earning the library the ire of civil libertarians. The incident earned a negative mention in the American Library Association magazine, American Librarian, as Wilson's suppression of the photos and the display were a blatant violation of the ALA's intellectual freedom codes.

The Leon County Commission's vote in favor of civil rights for gays stands in stark contrast to a vote in a similar matter in Gainesville Tuesday. There, the City Commission voted to approve a resolution that condemned the very concept of gay rights. The resolution warned that recognizing the rights of homosexuals would only lead to demands from groups interested in things like pedophilia, bestiality and necrophilia.

Nevermind that any of these sexual disorders could just as well be indulged in by people who call themselves heterosexual. When it comes to those suffering the self-willed psychological disorder of homophobia, the facts only get in the way of these peoples' obvious hatred fetish.

Thanks to the Leon County Commissioners, the American Family Association has been shown to be the dysfunctional family it truly is. For this, believers in a society of tolerance must stand up and cheer. Take a bow, commissioners. You deserve it.

The New World Order

FOR WHAT IT'S WORTH

New proof Helms, Buchanan are human; jury still out on the AFA

BY JACK MCCARTHY
STAFF WRITER

Wrath of God

Cultural conservatives of the stripe who always warn us that God reeks vengeance on those who cross "him" usually cite AIDS as exhibit A. In light of some recent health news, they might want to reconsider the God-as-medical avenger thesis.

Consider: Last week Jesse Helms and Pat Buchanan were both forced to undergo heart operations. Even if this doesn't prove their wrathful God thesis, it does lay to rest charges that Buchanan and Helms are heartless.

Local members of the Party of God must also wonder if it was just coincidence that almost at the very moment the latest Carole Griffin and Randy Brien show ("The Fags are Coming, the Fags are Coming") was playing at the Leon County Commission meeting Tuesday night, it was reported the censorious Rev. Donald Wildmon of the American Family Association was felled—by a heart attack.

And let's not forget George Bush's ticker problems almost two years past, and the rather quick dispatch of Lee Atwater following the ugly 1988 presidential elections.

For now I guess I'll stick with Susan Sontag's counter-thesis as expounded in her book, Illness as Metaphor. But you do have to wonder.

Enter Slick Willie?

The Leon County board of Commissioners deserves all the praise it gets for defying the attempt by sexually armored morality cops Carole "Madame Defarge" Griffin and Randy "Cotton Mather" Brien, to ban homosexuals from exercising their freedom of expression. The question now is whether State Attorney Slick Willie Meggs, who recently clamped down on X-rated videos at the behest of Brien and Griffin and co., will step in.

It's rumored that Meggs might be asked to view the films that have Griffin and Brien all lathered up. One can only hope that Meggs uses common sense and ignores them. If anything, perhaps Meggs should investigate Brien and Griffin for their own subliminal public sexual exhibitionism.

You can't turn on your television set or turn on your radio these days without having to listen to these two burbling on about some sexual topic or another. They make Hefner and Guccione look like the publishers of Punch or Reader's Digest (see Brien's mad rant in yesterday's Democrat). They make the Playboy channel look like an episode of Doogie Howser.

Well, on second thought.... No, not even Dr. Ruth, or Dr. Freud for that matter, went on about sex in public as much as this odd pair of sexual raconteurs.

Bewitched

A recent article in the Tallahassee Democrat told of Griffin getting booted off her radio talk show for irresponsibly accusing a local woman (I won't mention her name, as no one deserves to have their name linked with any of Griffin's wild accusations) of practicing witchcraft and having sex with animals.

Griffin's obsession with witchcraft, and the woman she attacked on her radio show, call her Samantha, rivals Mrs. Kravitz of the old television show Bewitched. Fortunately for Griffin, Samantha didn't sue, although the radio station probably was concerned she would.

The towering irony in all of this is that despite Brien and Griffin's oft-stated concern that our children (it's always for the children) being exposed to sexually explicit materials, Tallahassee lads and lasses can find all the x-rated sex chat they want merely by tuning in to Carol and Randy.

LETTERS

Editor:

As I opened a recent Flambeau I was pleasantly surprised to see a feature article on Malcolm X. I was glad to see him being recognized and appreciated for all his efforts toward the racial issues within the United States and abroad. But there is the issue of the negative portrayal of Malcolm X within the article. When I saw him holding the gun in his hand, peeking out the window, I saw yet another negative portrayal of a black male. One of the most upsetting factors in this article is that if one is not knowledgeable about Malcolm X, all they will see or want to see is "another nigger holding a big gun wanting to hurt someone."

Malcolm X was one of the few Black males that today's generation can look upon to respect and admire. He portrays the belief of coming from the bottom and reaching the top. He not only expressed that Black people should use the tactics of self-defense or counter-violence to protect themselves, but also told them to use their minds to find the path toward liberation. Most importantly, he struggled for the liberation of black people who were and still are being oppressed. He captures this feeling through his famous quote: "We declare our right on this earth to be a man to be a human being, to be respected as a human being, to be given the rights of a human being in this society on this earth on this day in which we intend to bring into existence by any means necessary."

BULLY FOR GOD

Conservative rabble rouser is waging a war for values

BY RON MATUS

STAFF WRITER

Randy Brien is a man on a mission.

"It's no secret that I'm a Christian," the conservative activist said in an interview Tuesday. "And when those values are challenged, someone needs to stand up and speak out."

Randy Brien has made himself that someone. Over the past few years, no single person—save perhaps anti-abortion activist Carole Griffin—has lobbed as many conservative monkeywrenches into what he perceives to be Tallahassee's Big Liberal Machine as Brien has.

Most recently, it was Brien who filed the complaint against the Leon County Public Library in an attempt to snuff out a lesbian and gay film series.

But in the bigger picture, the complaint was just another salvo in a mini holy war Brien has long been waging in defense of Christian-based "family values." It's a war his critics say he's undertaken almost singlehandedly and, for the most part, unsuccessfully. So far.

"I find it very interesting that wherever there is an effort to take away someone's rights—the right of a woman to choose to have an abortion, the right of gays and lesbians to show a film series—you will find Randy Brien and Carol Griffin," said Brenda Joyner, director of the Feminist Women's Health Center, a local abortion and reproductive health clinic. "These people are in the business of taking away rights."

Brien's list of targets for his conservative activism is long. For example:

- It was Brien who made the papers a few years ago for videotaping women on their way into local abortion clinics because, he said, he needed to protect himself from "tyrannical" pro-choicers.

- It was Brien who led local efforts in 1984 to put "creation science" into school curriculum and, in the past few years, to take mandatory sex education—and Halloween parties—out.

- It was Brien who helped prompt State Attorney Willie Meggs earlier this year into pulling adult videos off the shelves of local video stores—after one complaint.

And so on and so on.

"Tallahassee is becoming a cultural battleground," said the soft-spoken Brien, sitting at a table in the Eastwood Office Plaza's Rexall pharmacy. "I am for preserving conservative, Christian values."

Brien, 42, says he moved to Tallahassee from Illinois in 1982, five years after he became a born-again Christian. Now, besides running a wallpapering business with his wife Debbie, he hosts a talk show on radio station WVCV AM-1330 that serves as a forum for his beliefs.

"The only true set of values is a Biblical set of values," he said on his most recent show.

Brien also serves on the board of directors of the local chapter of the American Family Association (AFA), a group based in Tupelo, Miss. that's devoted to upholding Christian-based family values. The AFA, which boasts 450,000 members, has led several successful national boycotts of stores and corporations that distributed what it found to be morally unfit materials, such as Playboy and Rolling Stone.

"What are the forces that are causing the breakdown of the family? We at the American Family Association try to identify those causes and deal as directly as we can with what we interpret to be those causes," Brien said.

And what might those be? Pornography, he says; obscenity; and "the more active gay and lesbian groups."

"A lot of their strategy seems to be based around trying to get at younger people in society to introduce them into that lifestyle," Brien said about those groups. "And that's in their own literature."

He said he couldn't cite off the top of his head what literature he meant, but that he had read it and could find it if he had to.

"Those kind of comments are absolutely ludicrous," said Jeff Peters, a local attorney and co-organizer of the Tallahassee Lesbian and Gay Film Festival. "I hope rational people would recognize it as such."

Peters and others who have had run-ins with Brien are confident they do. Many critics say he's basically a one-man gang or, when

Maureen Malvern said Tuesday. "The distributor of these films does not handle pornography, and a night of X-rated type movies is not the kind of evening we had in mind."

Tuesday's library board meeting drew an evenly divided crowd of about 100, including protestors who characterized the videos as gay pornography, then took their fight to the county commission meeting following it.

Randy Brien, representing the Christian watchdog organization the American Family Association, charged that festival organizers and attendees would try to recruit children into a homosexual lifestyle. He asked the Board where they would draw the line if they allowed homosexuals to gain access to the library for their films.

"Can other groups, such as prostitutes, pedophiles, sex offenders and other deviants get in the library to promote their lifestyles?" Brien asked. "And as far as how this is supposed to benefit the community, I don't see how these videos promote the educational, cultural or recreational benefits of the community."

A more dramatic show of protest was demonstrated by Sam Hanchey, who feigned throwing a Tupperware bowl that he said was filled to the brim with human waste at the crowd.

"Do I have the right to pour this bowl of waste on the crowd? I've had the sense to put a lid on it. Do you have the intelligence to put a lid on this other filth?" he asked, gesturing towards the section of seats mostly occupied by the festival's supporters.

Many protestors said they didn't want their tax and donation money used to promote what most of them called a "sick and perverted way of life."

Some speakers also voiced concern for their children, saying that their own or someone else's children could mistakenly wander into the auditorium and be subjected to the viewing. More than one of the protestors also charged that allowing the film festival to take place would promote the spread of AIDS.

Flora McConkie, representing a group called the Family Issues Forum, said the films, which neither she nor any of the other protestors had seen, violate state obscenity laws. She pleaded with the Board to stop the festival.

"I considered the library a family-friendly place, but on the night of June 15, our library will be the equivalent of an adult movie theater," McConkie said. "Our tax and donation dollars are going to support this filth, and I'm particularly alarmed that the Program Room A is adjoining the children's room. Act now, don't let our children be harmed."

But speakers who came to support the library's decision to allow the festival countered the obscenity charges and took issue with some of the protestors' remarks.

"There are two constitutional principles here: the freedom of speech—as a government entity, the library is not allowed to restrict access to the films—and the separation of church and state—you are not permitted to impose a particular secular view on the community," said Charlene Carres, representing the American Civil Liberties Union. "And if you insist on previewing the films, you violate the First Amendment rights of prior restraint of individual's rights."

A couple of supporters addressed charges the protestors made about the lifestyles of gays and lesbians.

"It is statistically, historically and scientifically proven that it is heterosexual men who most often rape and batter children, not gays. Is the library going to ban them too?" asked Tallahassee resident Sue Gambill.

"The statement that the showing of these films will promote the spread of AIDS is ludicrous," charged Carres. "Right now it is the heterosexuals who are at the highest risk of spreading AIDS, and all along, the lowest risk group has been lesbians."

And one supporter, Michelle Ziemann, said that when she attended the festival at the library last year, it was the first positive images of homosexuality she'd ever seen.

"I came to last year's festival and it was my first opportunity to see what my history and my culture is all about," Ziemann said. "It was great to see something positive and not to have to hear what a horrible person I am."

Strozier Collection receives page of original Gutenberg

BY BRIAN SCOTT
FLAMBEAU WRITER

Florida State University has just acquired part of one of the first books ever printed using Johann Gutenberg's revolutionary movable-type printer and is making it available for public viewing.

Strozier Library has received a page from a 500-year-old original Gutenberg Bible, donated to FSU by Milton Stover Carothers, director of the Presbyterian University Center.

Gutenberg Bibles were the first books to be printed using a printing press with a moveable typeset, allowing books to be produced at much higher rates than older methods.

"It's the difference between a scribe writing an entire manuscript out by hand and a person with no particular writing skills producing a book by pulling a lever," said Barbara McCrimmon, a retired assistant professor from the school of library science.

This higher production rate had substantial religious repercussions.

"One of the main values of the Gutenberg Bibles was that it made it possible to distribute religious information to the people more readily," said Charles Miller, the director of libraries at FSU.

Gutenberg Bibles are extremely rare. The single page, a leaf from the book of Isaiah, has been valued at $17,500. Ten years ago, the University of Texas purchased an entire Gutenberg for $4 million. According to Miller, fewer than 40 Gutenberg Bibles are known to exist today.

The page of the Gutenberg is the latest donation by Carothers to the collection of rare books dedicated to his parents, the Julia Stover and Milton Washington Carothers Memorial Collection in Strozier Library.

The senior Carothers was a long time educator and administrator at FSU. The old Education Building is now named after him.

The collection of antique Bibles and other rare books is diverse. Included in the collection are a 1611 first-edition King James Version Bible, a 1491 Latin Bible, a copy of the Koran, and a centuries old Hebrew Torah.

"I wanted to give something from the three major religions of the area, Judaism, Christianity and Islam," Carothers said.

The memorial collection is available for anyone wishing to see at the special collections department on the first floor of FSU's Strozier Library.

Amtrak postpones Oct. deadline

FROM STAFF REPORTS

If you were planning to take a train back from Mardi Gras next year, you'd better start finding someone to bum a ride off of.

Amtrak has announced they are pushing the starting date back for its transcontinental Sunset Limited, a tri-weekly train that will connect Miami, Tallahassee, New Orleans, Los Angeles and other cities.

The service will start April 4, 1993, instead of the Oct. 28, 1992, date Amtrak was originally aiming for.

The delay is to allow CSX Transportation, the owner of the tracks, time to upgrade the railroad tracks, putting in ballast and banking the tracks to allow the train to go faster, according to Howard Robertson, a spokesperson for Amtrak.

Dave Bright, a senior transportation planner with the Tallahassee-Leon County Planning Commission, said Tallahassee's depot will be at Wahnish Way on the west side of Railroad Avenue, in the western edge of the Culpepper Building.

he's working in conjunction with anti-abortionist Grif fin, part of an obnoxious tag team without much community support.

"There aren't enough of these people to win at the ballot box, so they engage in scare tactics," said Joe Conte, president of the local chapter of the National Organization for Women. "They're just very vocal and very ugly."

"People take (Brienen) more seriously than they need to."

But Charlene Carres, legislative analyst for the American Civil Liberties Union, said Brienen and the movement he represents should be taken very seriously.

"His group (the AFA) decided early on to attack things at the local level ... and that strategy has been effective because people are not taking them seriously," she said. "They succeed with a small sliver of the community because the majority of the community is not out there fighting them."

Brienen insists he does speak for many. There are hundreds of members in the local AFA chapter, he says. And as far as the criticisms go. "The reality of truth is often met with such meaningless rhetoric."

Basically, that means he's not giving up.

"People appreciate someone drawing the line somewhere and saying enough's enough, there is a difference between right and wrong," Brienen said. "I cannot stand to sit back when there are wrongs and injustices going on ..."

FSU researchers team with Earthwatch

BY DON BOWMER
STAFF WRITER

A cutting edge research project at Florida State University's oceanography department will bring 32 new volunteers, as well as a significant new source of funding, to FSU's Turkey Point facility.

Oceanography department Chair Bill Burnett and Assistant Professor Jeff Chanton will head up the project—the first of its kind—which focuses on groundwater seepage in ocean floor sediment. The project, which has attracted the attention of Earth Watch, a nonprofit educational funding organization based in Boston, has been chosen by the organization's officials as one of 145 projects this year.

"Volunteers will have a rare chance to participate in some oceanographic research and will be part of the team," Burnett said Tuesday.

Volunteers will perform various functions such as testing well water, conducting chemical analysis of water samples and placing a seepage meter, which measures the volume of water flowing through the sediments of the ocean floor.

"In most parts of the world, ground water is moving towards the ocean," Burnett added. "So if you have pollutants in ground water, then eventually you will have a marine pollution problem."

According to Chanton, ocean vegetation fed by nutrients in the groundwater has a positive, direct effect on removal of dangerous carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

Chanton explained that the researchers need to learn how groundwater makes its way to the ocean before the effects of ground water pollution on the environment can be grasped.

"You have to understand the system first, and the quantity of things moving through the system before you can understand the importance of man-made emissions," Chanton said. "Almost every element is represented in the ocean. And those elements neither increase or decrease over geologic time."

Earth Watch will contribute $28,000, or 75 percent, of the money raised from the volunteers' fees to the research. The organization will keep the other 25 percent.

Andrew Hudson, Earth Watch spokesperson, said the 11-day project will cost volunteers $995 and include food and housing at Turkey Point's dormitory facility.

This graphic from Earthwatch Shows how groundwater moves naturally toward the sea.

"It's a creative way of funding research," Hudson said Sunday.

Burnett said he was pleased the program was receiving money from the non-government organization.

"In the past, 99.5 percent of all funding has been directly or indirectly from government sources," Burnett said. "This innovative way of funding gives average people like lawyers, doctors and teachers a unique opportunity to have some hands-on exposure to actual scientific research."

tific research."

Volunteers will have until late July to submit their applications with Earth Watch if they wish to participate in one of the two teams that will be working with the FSU scientists.

Jaye Young, an FSU graduate student in oceanography, is looking forward to working with the volunteers in August. She will be scuba diving with qualified volunteers on 10 scheduled trips off the coast of Florida.

"This is the greatest job in the world," Young said. "It's an experience I think they'll always remember."

"There's been very little work on land and coastal areas and the interaction between them," she added.

Jobs the center of pluralism conference to be held at FSU

BY SAMUEL WHITE
FLAMBEAU WRITER

Opportunity is knocking for minorities and women seeking employment in the near future, but only through better education and awareness of responsibilities can those possibilities pan out, say sponsors of a campus pluralism conference scheduled for Friday at Florida State University.

The conference, which will be held at FSU's Conference Center, is designed to educate faculty and administrators on the demands of rapidly changing student and work populations in higher education.

Conference officials also hope the meeting will help to foster a more pluralistic and accommodating environment for minorities at FSU.

Groomes

"By the year 2,000, 91 percent of the people entering the work force will be minorities and women," Freddie Groomes, executive assistant to the president for university human resources, said Tuesday.

According to FSU President Dale Lick, the kinds of jobs that will be open to minorities in the U.S. will be varied.

"The most newly created jobs taken by minorities and women will range from manual labor to highly educated jobs," he said. "One area in particular will be the shortage of college professors by the year 2010."

During the conference FSU staff and representatives will discuss gender bias and sexual harassment, discrimination, the importance of a multicultural curriculum and student diversity in the classroom.

In addition to FSU staff and faculty, a group of panelists will include Nancy Benda, director of equal education opportunity programs for the Florida Department of Education; Joe Quetone, executive director of the Governor's Council on Indian Affairs; Frank Scruggs, secretary of the state Department of Labor and Employment Security; and Regina Sofer, director of the State University System Office for Equal Opportunity Programs.

Isauro Santiago, a nationally known leader in bilingual/bicultural education and research and teacher training, will give the keynote address during the luncheon program, which starts at noon.

Santiago, president of Hostos Community College of the City University of New York, has done work on equity issues affecting Hispanics and on language policies affecting minorities.

Registration begins at 8 a.m. followed by a panel discussion at 8:30 based on strategies to facilitate a pluralistic community.

Strozier Collection receives page of original Gutenberg

BY BRIAN SCOTT
FLAMBEAU WRITER

Florida State University has just acquired part of one of the first books ever printed using Johann Gutenberg's revolutionary movable-type printer and is making it available for public viewing.

Strozier Library has received a page from a 500-year-old original Gutenberg Bible, donated to FSU by Milton Stover Carothers, director of the Presbyterian University Center.

Gutenberg Bibles were the first books to be printed using a printing press with a moveable typeset, allowing books to be produced at much higher rates than older methods.

"It's the difference between a scribe writing an entire manuscript out by hand and a person with no particular writing skills producing a book by pulling a lever," said Barbara McCrimmon, a retired assistant professor from the school of library science.

This higher production rate had substantial religious repercussions.

"One of the main values of the Gutenberg Bibles was that it made it possible to distribute religious information to the people more readily," said Charles Miller, the director of libraries at FSU.

Gutenberg Bibles are extremely rare. The single page, a leaf from the book of Isaiah, has been valued at $17,500. Ten years ago, the University of Texas purchased an entire Gutenberg for $4 million. According to Miller, fewer than 40 Gutenberg Bibles are known to exist today.

The page of the Gutenberg is the latest donation by Carothers to the collection of rare books dedicated to his parents, the Julia Stover and Milton Washington Carothers Memorial Collection in Strozier Library.

The senior Carothers was a long time educator and administrator at FSU. The old Education Building is now named after him.

The collection of antique Bibles and other rare books is diverse. Included in the collection are a 1611 first-edition King James Version Bible, a 1491 Latin Bible, a copy of the Koran, and a centuries old Hebrew Torah.

"I wanted to give something from the three major religions of the area, Judaism, Christianity and Islam," Carothers said.

The memorial collection is available for anyone wishing to see at the special collections department on the first floor of FSU's Strozier Library.

Amtrak postpones Oct. deadline

FROM STAFF REPORTS

If you were planning to take a train back from Mardi Gras next year, you'd better start finding someone to bum a ride off of.

Amtrak has announced they are pushing the starting date back for its transcontinental Sunset Limited, a tri-weekly train that will connect Miami, Tallahassee, New Orleans, Los Angeles and other cities.

The service will start April 4, 1993, instead of the Oct. 28, 1992, date Amtrak was originally aiming for.

The delay is to allow CSX Transportation, the owner of the tracks, time to upgrade the railroad tracks, putting in ballast and banking the tracks to allow the train to go faster, according to Howard Robertson, a spokesperson for Amtrak.

Dave Bright, a senior transportation planner with the Tallahassee-Leon County Planning Commission, said Tallahassee's depot will be at Wahnish Way on the west side of Railroad Avenue, in the western edge of the Culpepper Building.

Brien

he is working in conjunction with anti-abortionist Griffin, part of an obnoxious tag team without much community support.

"There aren't enough of these people to win at the ballot box, so they engage in scare tactics," said Jo Conte, president of the local chapter of the National Organization for Women. "They're just very vocal and very ugly."

"People take (Brien) more seriously than they need to."

But Charlene Carres, legislative analyst for the American Civil Liberties Union, said Brien and the movement he represents should be taken very seriously.

"His group (the AFA) decided early on to attack things at the local level . . . and that strategy has been effective because people are not taking them seriously," she said. "They succeed with a small sliver of the community because the majority of the community is not out there fighting them."

Brien insists he does speak for many. There are hundreds of members in the local AFA chapter, he says. And as far as the criticisms go, "The reality of truth is often met with such meaningless rhetoric."

Basically, that means he's not giving up.

"People appreciate someone drawing the line somewhere and saying enough's enough, there is a difference between right and wrong," Brien said. "I cannot stand to sit back when there are wrongs and injustices going on . . ."

FSU researchers team with Earthwatch

BY DON BOWMER
STAFF WRITER

A cutting edge research project at Florida State University's oceanography department will bring 32 new volunteers, as well as a significant new source of funding, to FSU's Turkey Point facility.

Oceanography department Chair Bill Burnett and Assistant Professor Jeff Chanton will head up the project—the first of its kind—which focuses on groundwater seepage in ocean floor sediment. The project, which has attracted the attention of Earth Watch, a nonprofit educational funding organization based in Boston, has been chosen by the organization's officials as one of 145 projects this year.

"Volunteers will have a rare chance to participate in some oceanographic research and will be part of the team," Burnett said Tuesday.

Volunteers will perform various functions such as testing well water, conducting chemical analysis of water samples and placing a seepage meter, which measures the volume of water flowing through the sediments of the ocean floor.

"In most parts of the world, ground water is moving towards the ocean," Burnett added. "So if you have pollutants in ground water, then eventually you will have a marine pollution problem."

According to Chanton, ocean vegetation fed by nutrients in the groundwater has a positive, direct effect on removal of dangerous carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

Chanton explained that the researchers need to learn how groundwater makes its way to the ocean before the effects of groundwater pollution on the environment can be grasped.

"You have to understand the system first, and the quantity of things moving through the system before you can understand the importance of man-made emissions," Chanton said. "Almost every element is represented in the ocean. And those elements neither increase or decrease over geologic time."

Earth Watch will contribute $28,000, or 75 percent, of the money raised from the volunteers' fees to the research. The organization will keep the other 25 percent.

Andrew Hudson, Earth Watch spokesperson, said the 11-day project will cost volunteers $995 and include food and housing at Turkey Point's dormitory facility.

This graphic from Earthwatch Shows how groundwater moves naturally toward the sea.

"It's a creative way of funding research," Hudson said Sunday.

Burnett said he was pleased the program was receiving money from the non-government organization.

"In the past, 99.5 percent of all funding has been directly or indirectly from government sources," Burnett said. "This innovative way of funding gives average people like lawyers, doctors and teachers a unique opportunity to have some hands-on exposure to actual scientific research."

tific research."

Volunteers will have until late July to submit their applications with Earth Watch if they wish to participate in one of the two teams that will be working with the FSU scientists.

Jaye Young, an FSU graduate student in oceanography, is looking forward to working with the volunteers in August. She will be scuba diving with qualified volunteers on 10 scheduled trips off the coast of Florida.

"This is the greatest job in the world," Young said. "It's an experience I think they'll always remember."

"There's been very little work on land and coastal areas and the interaction between them," she added. For more information about Earth Watch call (800) 776-0188, or write for applications to: Earth Watch, 680 Mount Auburn, P.O. 403, Waterfield, Mass. 02272

Jobs the center of pluralism conference to be held at FSU

BY SAMUEL WHITE
FLAMBEAU WRITER

Opportunity is knocking for minorities and women seeking employment in the near future, but only through better education and awareness of responsibilities can those possibilities pan out, say sponsors of a campus pluralism conference scheduled for Friday at Florida State University.

The conference, which will be held at FSU's Conference Center, is designed to educate faculty and administrators on the demands of rapidly changing student and work populations in higher education.

Conference officials also hope the meeting will help to foster a more pluralistic and accommodating environment for minorities at FSU.

Groomes

"By the year 2,000, 91 percent of the people entering the work force will be minorities and women," Freddie Groomes, executive assistant to the president for university human resources, said Tuesday.

According to FSU President Dale Lick, the kinds of jobs that will be open to minorities in the U.S. will be varied.

"The most newly created jobs taken by minorities and women will range from manual labor to highly educated jobs," he said. "One area in particular will be the shortage of college professors by the year 2010."

During the conference FSU staff and representatives will discuss gender bias and sexual harassment, discrimination, the importance of a multicultural curriculum and student diversity in the classroom.

In addition to FSU staff and faculty, a group of panelists will include Nancy Benda, director of equal education opportunity programs for the Florida Department of Education; Joe Quetone, executive director of the Governor's Council on Indian Affairs; Frank Scruggs, secretary of the state Department of Labor and Employment Security; and Regina Sofer, director of the State University System Office for Equal Opportunity Programs.

Isauro Santiago, a nationally known leader in bilingual/bicultural education and research and teacher training, will give the keynote address during the luncheon program, which starts at noon.

Santiago, president of Hostos Community College of the City University of New York, has done work on equity issues affecting Hispanics and on language policies affecting minorities.

Registration begins at 8 a.m. followed by a panel discussion at 8:30 based on strategies to facilitate a pluralistic community.

Film festival aims to entertain and educate

BY MARTIN ALLEN

STAFF WRITER

From the earliest works of George (A Trip to the Moon) Melies and Windsor (Gertie the Dinosaur) McCay to the avant-garde "underground" films of Andy Warhol in the 1960s, there have been people armed with a motion-picture camera, determined to make films that challenge the everyday notion of "reality".

As with any portion of society, it should come as no surprise that a large percentage of filmmakers are homosexual, and that they too are determined to have their say, come hell or Dan Quayle.

"Film images convey very powerful meanings," said Jeff Peters, one of the organizers of the 1992 Tallahassee Lesbian and Gay Film Festival, the second such festival here in as many years.

"We decided it was time to bring some positive film portrayals of the lesbian and gay lifestyle to Tallahassee, because all we ever seem to get out of mainstream Hollywood are films that have a negative view of homosexuals," he added.

Peters elaborated on this, citing several recent examples from television and film, such as the highly controversial hit Basic Instinct, which he summed up in one word: "Junk."

In addition, Peters, a practicing attorney, mentioned the now-infamous "kiss" scene from L.A. Law. The "lesbian subplot" has virtually ceased to exist and the ads for the last few episodes of the current season are hinting at a new romance—with a man—for the Amanda Donahoe character.

Then, there's the one episode of thirtysomething that was never repeated on the ABC network, because it ended with a scene of two men waking up in bed next to each other.

"We, as a people, have to reach a point where we say enough is enough," Peters said.

Judging by some of those who came to speak in defense of the film festival at the library on Tuesday (see related article), there is indeed an audience willing and eager to see these films.

"For a long time, we have asked to be tolerated, not accepted," said Michelle Ziemann, an FSU grad. "Now we are asking to be accepted as well, because it is our right."

"I'm all in favor of the festival," said Aaron Lucier, another FSU grad. "Because how else can we discuss the need for change? The majority is not always right."

A quick look at some of the scheduled offerings reveals quite a diverse line-up of films from the world over:

- WESTLER EAST OF THE WALL—Billed as the "love story of two men who risk all to be together," this film promises to have historic as well as political interest because it is supposed to contain scenes of the former East Berlin that were photographed with a clandestine Super-8 camera

Film Festival Schedule

The following films will be shown at the 1992 Tallahassee Lesbian and Gay Film Festival. Saturday and Sunday's screenings take place at the United Church on Mahan Drive at 8 p.m. each night. Monday's take place at 6:30 at the Leon County Public Library, Auditorium A.

Saturday, June 13:

- Westler East Of The Wall—A romantic—and historic—story of two men who risk all to be together.
- Flesh and Paper—The life and writing of Indian lesbian poet and writer Suniti NamJoshi.
- Family Turns—A charming lesbian coming out comedy (featuring Dusty Springfield on the soundtrack).

Sunday, June 14:

- I Got This Way From Kissing Girls—A range of ages, races, sizes and types embracing, smiling and smooching to an evocative soundtrack.
- Beauties Without A Cause—Four lawless drag queens in a delirious moral comedy with compelling hair-dos and an excitable soundtrack.
- Ecce Homo—A call to reclaim gay power in America through positive sexual attitudes.
- Flames of Passion—A modern gay romance.
- A Maffie Called Simon—An exploration of the bonds between gay and anti-apartheid activism in a film about black activist Simon Nkodi.
- I Need A Man Like You . . . To Make My Dreams Come True—Feminist cabaret at its zaniest.

Monday, June 15:

- Kim—The story of a young Puerto Rican lesbian coming out and coming of age in New York City.
- Andy The Furniture Maker—A biographical sketch about gayness and rebellion.
- Affirmations—From the maker of Tongues Untied, an exploration of Black gay male desires and dreams.
- The Lesbian Impress Card—An ad spoof with a lesbian slant.

'Czech' your expectations at door for Florida State opera offerings

BY CHRIS PARKER
STAFF WRITER

If you've never seen an opera, you might think they're populated by extremely obese people in tutus and footlocks, belting out ear-shattering notes in a foreign language, without subtitles. Well, you can relax. It's much closer to a Broadway musical, without the showstopping dance tunes, possibly with more of a plot and definitely with better music. This weekend, you can see for yourself, as the Florida State Opera presents two one-act operas, Portrait of Manon and Comedy on the Bridge, Friday and Saturday at Opperman Music Hall.

Composed at the end of the 19th century, Portrait of Manon by Jules Massenet is a sequel to his very popular Manon. The sequel takes place several years after Manon. The chevalier, in love with Manon but too late to save her in the prequel, is now old and in love with his memory of Manon, epitomized in a portrait. He will not let his ward, Jean, marry his love, Aureole, a poor peasant girl. That is, until Aureole deceptively appears before him in the same costume Manon wears in the portrait. If you've seen any made-for-TV romantic movies, you can probably guess the ending. The music, however, is full of beautiful, tender melodies, many of them recalling the best tunes from the original.

The other opera on this double bill is Bohuslav Martinu's Comedy on the Bridge, a Czechoslovakian opera with music rich in the peasant tradition of folk dances and folk tunes, recalling Czech composers Smetana and Dvorak. Based on a popular play from the early 1800s, it is the story of two couples trapped on a bridge between two armies.

In Czechoslovakia in the 18th and 19th centuries, Bohemia, a Czech province, was the site of a number of wars, because it was a flat land, surrounded by mountains, and in the middle of Europe. Because of its convenient location, armies would meet there, according to director Shari Boruvka-Roth, a native Czechoslovakian. Thus, the local population was often caught in the middle, leading to their own attitude toward war, expressed by one character as "Let us sit down and perhaps the cannonballs will fly over our heads."

In the opera, the characters can't leave the bridge, because of insurmountable bureaucratic obstacles in the form of passes that allow entrance and exit from the bridge.

"It is a comedy and a farce," said Boruvka-Roth in a recent interview, "with a very human kind of humor. It is a very witty, ethnic piece, in contrast to the other, which is beautiful and romantic. The two pieces complement themselves very well."

John Scheffler, a New York set designer who worked on the wonderful Merry Widow sets, will be adding his expertise to both pieces. Christopher Fecteau will direct musicians from the University Symphony in Comedy on the Bridge. The Portrait of Manon will be directed by Lincoln Clark, and conducted by Douglas Fisher.

The Portrait of Manon and Comedy on the Bridge will be performed at the Opperman Music Hall Friday and Saturday night at 8. Admission is $7.50 for the public, $6 for senior citizens, and free to FSU students with valid ID. Call 644-6500 for ticket reservations or information.

• FLESH AND PAPER—The life and works of Indian poet/writer (and lesbian) Suniti Namjoshi.

• BECAUSE THE DAWN—A modern day "vampire musical comedy" set in New York City. Sounds like an updated/re-write of Hammer Films The Vampire Lovers.

The majority of the films will be shown Saturday, June 13, and Sunday, June 14, at the United Church on Mahan Drive. The festival continues Monday night at the Leon County Public Library with four more items including Affirmations, a study of Black gay men by the maker of the (banned by WSFV-TV) documentary Tongues Untied.

One film has been removed from the schedule at the organizer's own discretion, not out of fear of possible backlash, but because the promoters simply felt that the one item containing explicit sexuality might have conflicted with the greater theme of having "something for everyone," according to Peters.

"We have political films, foreign films and films that are just plain fun," he said.

The 1992 Tallahassee Lesbian and Gay Film Festival begins Saturday night and continues Sunday night at the United Church on Mahan Drive. Showtime is at 8 pm on both nights. A two-day pass may be purchased in advance at Rubyfruit Books, 666 W. Tennessee for $7. One-day passes are also available for $4, but the promoters caution that seating is limited. Remaining tickets can be purchased at the door for $5 each night. The final evening will be a presentation of shorter works on video at the Leon County Public Library, for which there is no charge. For further information, or to volunteer, call either Dana Farmer (656-3441), Mo Malvern (562-6095) or Jeff Peters (656-2024).

Off-Street Players act to aid homeless

BY RON MATUS
STAFF WRITER

Tallahassee's Off Street Players hope to raise some awareness about people on the street with a benefit performance tonight of a play about two transients.

Proceeds from T-Bone and Weasel will go to the Tallahassee Cold Nights Shelter, a local homeless shelter always in need of everything from toilet paper to blankets to cash for the bills.

"It's a very spartan place," Christie Koontz, president of the shelter's board of directors, said earlier this week. "Right now we have cots that have fallen apart, the coffee makers have burned out . . . There are no luxuries."

Some of the money raised may also be used to help the shelter purchase the Tennessee Street building it's currently leasing.

But Koontz and those involved with the play say there's more to the benefit than raising dough. The more important objective, they say, is raising consciousness—getting people to understand the extent and nature of homelessness in Tallahassee.

"I think it's always a good thing to raise consciousness, especially about homelessness, because the problem seems to be getting bigger and bigger every day," said Nadine Purvis, a member of the Off Street Players' board of directors. "As Tallahassee grows, the homeless situation is going to get more and more dire."

The results of a survey released last month by the Tallahassee Coalition for the Homeless counted more than 400 homeless persons in Leon County, a roughly 20 percent increase from last year. But because the very nature of homelessness makes it impossible to arrive at an accurate count, homeless advocates believe the true figure may be three to four times higher.

Koontz said the Cold Nights Shelter alone has served more than 850 separate individuals since December.

Benefit organizers hope the play, a comedy written by contemporary Southern playwright John Kline, can change the way some people perceive those individuals.

T-Bone and Weasel is about two transient men (played by Donovan Dain Scott and Chance McConnell, respectively) and the often unscrupulous people (all played by Bob Martin) they meet on their travels. Like many real life homeless persons, the fictional transients don't really get very far "although they have high hopes and big plans."

"By using humor it's possible to create situations that make us take a closer look at people and issues which, in other contexts, would make us uncomfortable," said director Peggy West. "I hope (the play) makes you see a homeless person as another individual with hopes, dreams and aspirations."

"They're not alien beings."

The benefit showing of T-Bone and Weasel begins tonight at 8 at the theater at 609 Glenview Drive. Tickets for the benefit are $15 each or $25 for two. The play also runs June 12, 13, 18, 19 and 20, same time, same place. Tickets for those shows are $6 for most patrons; $5 for students and senior citizens.

For more information about the play, call 847-3494. For more information about the shelter, call 224-9055.

Pool Q's float back into town with new faces, new sound

BY MICK BUCHANAN

PECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

To experience one of the most unique bands to ever emerge from the South, rack up the balls and make the chalk for the Swimming Pool Q's, who invade the Grand Finale Friday night.

The Q's are one of the great and unique bands of all time, and have recorded everything from vintage pop to eccentricities in the American folk band of the near future. They formed in 1978 between vocalist/lyricist/pop guru Jeff Calder and lead guitarist Bob Elsey. The band debuted as a quintet, featuring the haunting vocals of Anne Boston Richmond, who left the Q's after a decade in 1987.

During their long and varied career, the Q's released such critically acclaimed recordings as Blue Tomorrow in 1986 and World War 2.5 in 1989. Although the Pool Q's have been the darlings of music critics all over the country, they've been content to forego the hype and dubious glamour of the music business in favor of hanging in Atlanta, Ga., and honing their chops.

In the three years since World War 2.5 was released, the band has experienced a lot of changes, most notably the addition of bassist Gary Brown.

"Since the addition of Gary, the rhythm section has really come together," Calder said in a phone interview earlier this week. "The previous lineups have always been more structure oriented with the songwriting approach. With the new songs (since WW 2.5) and the new band, I didn't want to force it. I wanted the songs to be able to grow organically and develop a life of their own. This is the first time we've been to Florida in 15 months, but we've been developing these songs all through the Southeast region live on stage, and as a result the new songs are more ethereal and poetic. WW 2.5 was angrier in contrast to the newer material."

The Finale's crowd can expect to hear eight of these new songs Friday, including "The Ghost in the Galaxy," described by Calder as "pretty," "The Do What and the Who What," "The Angel Made of Words," and "Light Arriving Soon." "There's a lot of improvisation with the new lineup," Calder said. "This music took a lot longer to develop. A lot of it had slower tempos, and you can't really play songs like that on stage in honky-tonks in the South.

Calder has been pursuing literary interests as well as musical ones. He recently penned an article for Duke University's literary journal, South Atlantic Quarterly, titled "Living By Night In The Land Of Opportunity." The whopping 40-page essay has been published in paperback, with a hardback edition coming out this summer. The article caught the attention of the South By Southwest Music Conference in Austin, Texas, and he was asked to sit on a panel at last year's conference.

Opening tonight's show will be Train of Thought, a new local band whose lineup includes Dan Wester on bass and vocals, Mark Smith on guitars and vocals, Jay Miller on drums, and Dan Hebenthal on lead vocals and harmonica.

Atlanta's own Swimming Pool Q's—perennial Tallahassee favorites—play Friday night at the Grand Finale with Train of Thought. It's an 18-plus event, and the music starts around 9:30. Admission is $3 for those 21 and over, and $4 for the 18-20 year old crowd.

Come say ahoi to Sharla

BY KATI KAIRIES

ARTS EDITOR

When Sharla Benedict brings her band to the Grand Finale Saturday night, it'll be her final performance here or anywhere else in the U.S. for a very long time.

But Benedict isn't quitting the music business. She's just making the ultimate road trip—to Prague, Czechoslovakia, to join in the artistic ferment roiling in that former Eastern Bloc nation.

"It's like Paris in the 1920s," Benedict said Tuesday night in a phone interview from her Athens, Ga., home. "Artists and musicians from all over the world are gathering there. There's an incredible, passionate feeling for art in Prague right now."

Benedict plans to play her music and stay in Prague as long as she can, which she says could be a year or longer. She spent last weekend shedding excess baggage in a yard sale and making final preparations

CALENDAR

YO, ASPIRING PLAYWRIGHTS! STEP TO THE MAILBOX AND SEND OFF YOUR SCRIPTS TO TALLAHASSEE COMMUNITY COLLEGE for their Sixth Annual Playwrights Conference, a week-long event to be held in the fall. The selected play will become a major production of the TCC theatre company (the West End Players) and others will be presented as staged readings. Scripts, which may be one, two or three acts in length, should be sent to Dr. DeHart or Technical Supervisor Tim Frost, Theatre Department, Tallahassee Community College, 444 Appleyard Dr., Tallahassee, FL 32304 2895. Deadline is July 6, selections will be announced August.

A STATE SONGWRITING CONTEST CO-SPONSORED BY LOYD TINGLER NATURE PARK in Pinellas Park (that's down by St. Petersburg) and the Consortium for Art & Media Studies is soliciting entries through August 1. The emphasis is on acoustic music, and the entry fee is $10 for one or two songs (entrants are limited to two songs each). The 50 best songs will be showcased at "Music Without A Net," a festival to be held Sept. 12 at Loyd Tinger Nature Park. More than 200 performers are expected to compete for a $1,750 grand prize package and $350 in cash. For more information on contest regulations and entry requirements, call (813)546-0731.

JUST THOUGHT YOU'D LIKE TO KNOW THE SLATE FOR LOLLAPALOOZA '92 HAS been announced—and the travelling rock extravaganza will play two-count 'em two dates in Florida. This year's lineup includes the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Ministry, Ice Cube, Soundgarden, the Jesus and Mary Chain, Pearl Jam, and Lush. They'll break the sound barrier Saturday, Aug. 22, in Miami and Sunday, Aug. 23, in Orlando. Tickets go on sale this Saturday, June 13, at noon at all Ticketmaster outlets, and cost $26.50, which includes 50 cents per ticket going to the Homeless Coalition. Make a weekend of it! We'll keep you posted with fresh developments as they occur.

THERE'S NO NEED TO STAY STUCK IN YOUR WICKIUP THIS WEEKEND . . . THERE'S A heap of hoppin' good fun to be had. And we've rounded it all up just for you.

Like, for instance, at Bimini's, where John Blue'll make your heart sing during Friday's Happy Hour. Work For Higher proves that you can't get enough of that funky stuff Friday and Saturday nights and Johari Window completes their whirlwind tour of local saloons Sunday night with Dead Night. Call 575-4183 for information.

At the Mill Bakery and Eatery on the Parkway, Carlos and Friends get friendly during Friday's Happy Hour, and those Real Men guys play Friday and Saturday nights inside where the salad bar meets the beer taps. Cover is a mere $2. Call 656-2867 to inquire further.

Tonight at the Grand Finale is Odd Couple Night, with slammin', jammin', sweatin', swearin' Frankenfinger opens for the less raucous, but no less fun, Zombie Birdhouse. Rumor has it that Frankenfinger drummer (and former Flam head cheese) Ron Matus will wear a leather skirt. Seeing will be believing! You'll only have to pay a mere pittance to check it out. Friday night Atlanta's Swimming Pool Q's make what must be their 112th appearance in Tallahassee, with Train of Thought opening. Admission to that one is $4 and it's an 18-plus event. Saturday night, Sharla Benedict and her Athens posse, Medusa Oblongata, join fellow Athenians Fuzzy Sprouts and the Go Figures in a stage-stompin' bon voyage party. Expect to pay $4 to get in, and this too is an 18-plus thang. Call 599-9358 for more information.

Bullwinkle's, home of the happy moose crowd, hosts the Groove Merchants tonight. Big Fun tickles fancies during Friday's Happy Hour, while Slapstick gets slap-happy Friday and Saturday nights. Carlos and Friends entertain Sunday. And it's all free-dee-dee-dee.

Friday night is Stetson's Country Night at the Moon, featuring Barry Fish. If you get there early and ask nicely, you might just get some free country dancing lessons. Call 222-MOON for admission information.

The mike is open as all get out tonight at the Hole in the Wall. Friday and Saturday nights, Trash Palace make's a man's Hole in the Wall their castle. Call 561-8445 for information.

The main event at the Main Event will be Canal Street (fresh from last week's anniversary jam) tonight and Stone Blue (I thought rocks were kind of greyish) Friday and Saturday nights. Will it cost ya? Call 681-2344 for the dope.

Attention! New listing! Dudley's Pub features the slick sounds of Steve Glass Friday and Saturday from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. and those purveyors of delicious sounds, the Groove Merchants, both nights from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. Does anybody know the phone number for this place?

And last, but never, ever least, the Blue Monday Guys serenade the crowd at the mighty Pearl Friday and Saturday nights. It ain't nothin' but a party, y'all.

And don't you forget it.

for her hometown farewell gig and her July 8 departure. Things have moved pretty fast for her since her decision to move to Prague. Benedict said a friend's dream gave her the courage to make that decision.

"My friend Carter called me one morning and said he'd had a vision," she said. "He told me to sell everything and pack my bags, because I was going to Prague. And it seemed like part of a natural progression in my life. For the first time, I'm not attached to anything. This last year in my life has been about growth and letting go. I just figured, why not?"

"It's kind of a wild hair, but I'm excited. I can't believe I have the balls to do this!"

Benedict, who was a mainstay of the Tallahassee music scene in bands like the Shakes and Begg and Achin', will play Saturday night with her Athens-based band, Medusa Oblongata, which includes another homey, guitarist/vocalist Pete Hagerman. Two other bands from Athens will warm things up for Benedict's bon voyage performance: Fuzzy Sprouts, described by Benedict as a "punk/fusion/funk/jazz" band, and the Go Figures, which she says features "a white boy with the voice of a huge black woman."

It should be an eclectic—and appropriate—way to say "ahoi" (Czech slang for "catch you later").

Medusa Oblongata, featuring world traveller and chanteuse extraordinaire Sharla Benedict, plays Saturday night at the Grand Finale. Fuzzy Sprouts and the Go Figures come all the way from Athens, Ga., to open the show. Music starts around 9-ish and admission is $4. It's an 18-plus event, y'all.

HOROSCOPE

THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 1992

Jeane Dixon's

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your ability to size up people and situations stands you in good stead now. Save money for investment purposes. An exciting career opportunity will arise next December. A move to another city or state is possible early in 1993.
Have more faith in your mate or business partner. A positive attitude will bring new financial gains next March. Focus your energies on building a child's confidence.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Quarterback Joe Montana, autoracer Jackie Stewart, actor Gene Wilder, actress Adrienne Barbeau.
ARIES (March 21-April 19): An abrupt change at work could cause some anxious moments. An older person comes to your rescue.
Remember to reward this person's thoughtfulness in tangible ways.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be more receptive to suggestions from an older person who has your best interests at heart. The financial picture shows continued improvement. A candid chat with your mate brings new peace of mind.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You should be able to achieve great things in the work arena now. Team resources can and should be tapped.
Trips bring positive results. Make an important decision before day's end.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This should be a high-profile day for you.
You are able to talk your way to a rewarding new collaboration.
Beneficial changes will follow. Mail a long-overdue letter or package.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Financial matters can go haywire now think about what you are doing. You thrive on conversation and travel. Do not be a dead weight. Call a truce in a relationship compromise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Double-check important details and decisions. A give-and-take attitude will help you move mountains. Sweet talk can enhance a romantic relationship, too, if you are sincere.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pay your debts and you will gain a key advantage.
Be open to newcomers and their suggestions. Wave the white flag of surrender and call a truce with your romantic partner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your intuition serves you well. A domestic squabble can be resolved if you make the first move. Strive to achieve new understanding with an older person.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21):
Seek experts' advice on investments.
You may need to increase your insurance coverage if your family has grown. A kind word will work wonders with a sensitive person.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The barriers could come tumbling down where an employment or financial situation is concerned. Hold firmly to familiar ground and methods. Trying to mix business with pleasure would be a mistake.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Full steam ahead! You are able to talk your way into a wonderful financial deal. Avoid answering someone who asks too many personal questions. Rocking the love boat is risky now.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A promising career or financial enterprise would benefit from your efforts. Showcase your special talents. There will be plenty to discuss moneywise.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are courageous in every way. Even as youngsters, they are unafraid to make decisions and deal with the consequences. Intellectual and practical, these Gemini's tend to distrust emotional displays. Encourage them to open up to their loved ones. They make excellent lawyers or business executives, with an ability to be somewhat single-minded in pursuit of their goals. Their quick wit serves them well in almost any situation or relationship.

FSU officials discount CFA study

BY MARK NESSMITH
SPORTS EDITOR

According to a recent College Football Association graduation rate study, the 34.5 percent graduation rate for the 1986 Florida State recruiting class is well below the national average of 57 percent.

FSU's 1986 football recruiting class, which included current NFL players LeRoy Butler, Dexter Carter and Lawrence Dawsey, won 83 percent of its games over a five year period. However, the CFA's data, which includes 60 surveyed schools, ranks it below the University of Florida's 1986 class (81 percent) and the University of Miami's (72.9).

Florida State officials said Wednesday the CFA grad rate statistics overlook several factors, creating the impression the FSU situation is worse than it is.

"We know that those figures are misleading, that our football program has done a much better job than those figures would imply," FSU president Dale Lick said. "Nonetheless if you start with the group in 1986 and you look at the group in 91, that's what happens."

FSU football coach Bobby Bowden dismissed the study as old news. He added that "it's a very unfair stat."

"Those kids will all come back and graduate," Bowden said.

Mark Meleney, the FSU football team academic advisor, said the study takes into account all 29 players in the 1986 class.

Of those 29, Meleney said, five quit school after their first two semesters and seven went on to play in the NFL. The 1991 Seminole football media guide lists only six of those players as current pros, however Meleney accounted for Terry Anthony who is pursuing a free-agent contract.

Meleney said if the early drop-outs and pro players (many of whom he said are pursuing their degrees in the off season) are excluded, that leaves only seven of the remaining 17 without degrees—a graduation rate of 59 percent.

"I don't think we're panicking over it," Meleney said.

FSU Athletic Director Bob Goin, who was attending the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics conference in Marco Island, Fla. Wednesday, agreed.

"Before the summer is over that statistic is going to change because we've got kids back getting degrees right now. So we'll be above the 50th percentile," Goin told the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel.

The CFA graduation-rate statistics take into account those players who received a football-related scholarship, those who enrolled in college in 1986 but did not receive financial aid until after their freshman year, and those who enrolled but then transferred to another school where they received a football scholarship.

Lick has instructed faculty members on his Athletic Academic Board to conduct a study on grad rates and other problems facing FSU. But he said the study is not a reaction to the CFA study.

"(The study) has been going on for some time now," Lick said. "It's been going on really

'I don't think we're panicking over it.'
—Mark Meleney
FSU academic advisor

since I've come.

"We have to do a better job not only with recruiting but we have to do a better job in making sure our students are making satisfactory progress toward graduation."

United Press International contributed to this report.

SERVING TALLAHASSEE FOR 77 YEARS

VOL. 77, NO. 163

Life as a fruit vendor has its ups and downs, says Leon Horton. Horton was selling mangos on the corner of Monroe and Magnolia Saturday.

The Hard SELL

BY BEN RHODES

FLAMBEAU WRITER

Every spring, in the deserted lots of downtown Tallahassee streets and along lonely stretches of America's backroad highways, an endangered breed of entrepreneur is somehow managing to survive.

There's a proliferation of one-stop, air-conditioned supermarkets across the county. But many local consumers are finding themselves by passing these places in favor of the muggy, open-air roadside stands of local produce hucksters.

One such vendor, David Gaines, has been operating his produce stand at the corner of Macomb and Gaines streets for almost two years. He and his three employees peddle fruits and vegetables seven days a week, rain or shine.

Ninety percent of his goods come direct from farmers in north Florida and south Georgia, which he said is the main reason people come to him.

"The taste is better because (the produce) is fresher and it's never been refrigerated," Gaines said Saturday. "It comes here fresh from the vine in less than 24 hours."

Bob Birdwell, a retired 23-year veteran of the U.S. Army, stood in the drizzle next to his white pickup truck off of Crawfordville Highway Saturday afternoon. His day begins at 5:30 a.m. when he goes out in the field of his brother's Monticello farm to pick the cantaloupes he hopes to sell that day.

After getting stuck in the mud during the morning harvest, Birdwell began the day's 50-mile trek to the southside of town, where he arrived about 9:30 a.m. If only the rain wouldn't detract from his business, the droplets of water trickling from the brim of his straw hat wouldn't bother him so much.

"It's a lot of work. Any time you fool with produce you gotta put in a lot of hours," he said. "I'll probably go home and go out in the field again."

In addition to the long hours required of the work, Birdwell said vendors have a number of costs and variables that keep their already low profit margins to a minimum. Transportation, insurance, irrigation and other equipment all are somewhat foreseeable factors in operational costs.

But the big question mark is always the ## Lesbian, gay culture fest starts today in Tallahassee

BY SUE MULLINS

STAFF WRITER

More than 20 years after the Stonewall rebellion in New York City thrust the gay rights movement into the country's public eye, Tallahassee's gay and lesbian community hosts a week of cultural events to coincide with the anniversary of the historical rebellion.

Lesbian and gay residents will celebrate their lifestyle this week as the second annual Tallahassee Lesbian and Gay Pride Week gets started tonight at the Leon County Public Library, where a series of videos dealing with gay and lesbian themes will be shown.

The controversial Video Night at the Library, which survived an ill-fated attempt by a group of local residents to prevent the videos from being shown, kicks off a week's worth of events, such as a first-ever Community Forum.

The forum will be comprised of leaders from several rights movements, including area gay activists who plan to discuss the common problems of oppression and discrimination against homosexuals, according to Gay Pride co-organizer Rob Nixon.

"This event serves many purposes, including giving area gays and lesbians a sense of pride and feeling of belonging, and also to allow the whole community a chance to see how large and diverse a group we are," Nixon said Friday.

"Holding the community forum brings together other groups who struggle every day for basic human rights to share some insights and philosophies about how to deal with oppression," he added.

125 meet in church to rally in protest of convenience store killing

BY JAY SCHROER

ASST. NEWS EDITOR

Members of the local African-American community gathered Sunday to protest what they see as an unjust charge of manslaughter in the wake of the recent killing of a Black customer by a white convenience store clerk.

The rally, organized by the Ministers Coalition for a Better Community, was held in St. Mary's Primitive Baptist Church. Several speakers urged attendees to "do the right thing."

"We intend to push for a murder charge," said Rev. R. N. Gooden, but he added violence is not the way to deal with anger over the case.

Gooden told the crowd of 125 that economic problems fuelled by racism must be addressed to resolve frustrations in the Black community.

"Don't burn it down, because we want somebody to own it," said Gooden.

John Eugene Franklin, 36, died Wednesday night after being struck in the neck with a baseball bat during a dispute with a store clerk at the E-Z Serve convenience store at 412 Putnam Drive.

According to the Tallahassee Police Department report, Franklin got into an argument with clerk Robert Emmet Wallace when he attempted to purchase ice cream and potato chips with food stamps. The dispute centered on whether Franklin had the necessary identification to use

FSU SG pulls ads from Flambeau

BY MATT GRIMISON
STAFF WRITER

Florida State University student government officials say they are pulling thousands of dollars in advertising money from the Florida Flambeau and moving it to another publication in order to reach more students. But Flambeau officials call the move an attempt to illegally make good on threats to influence the paper's coverage.

SG ads, which include announcements of senate positions and bill information, have traditionally run in the non-profit Flambeau. But an executive order filed at the most recent student senate meeting reduces Flambeau advertising by about half for the next fiscal year, with the other half running in other publications.

"It is our intention to advertise in all three main campus newspapers, the Flambeau, the FSView and Greek Life," Sean Sullivan, SG public relations director, said Sunday. "That way we reach the most students."

Belin

But Flambeau editor Dave Bryan disagreed with Sullivan's assessment and called the move a result of bitter feelings toward the Flambeau on the part of former Seminole Party members in the student senate. The Seminole Party, which disbanded at the end of the spring semester after its presidential ticket lost to the Monarchy Party ticket, criticized the paper's coverage of the elections and a party member introduced a resolution condemning the paper.

The resolution said the Flambeau "worked to hamper the accurate dissemination of facts concerning campus news to students" and asked former Student Body President Brian Philpot to "remedy" the situation.

"I think it's an obvious attempt to follow through with the retribution threatened following our coverage of the last student body presidential elections," Bryan said.

According to the FSU student government constitution, SG must advertise bills, resolutions and open positions in a campus publication of "general distribution" but must not attempt to influence the editorial content of the publication.

Rick Johnson, Flambeau general counsel, said student government's decision to pull advertising out of the paper in favor of other publications is in violation of its own constitution.

"It sounds like a retaliatory use of a government agency to influence the content of the paper," Johnson said Sunday, pointing out that since student government uses state funds, it is subject to all state government regulations.

"No agency is allowed to use its power, especially the power of the purse, to limit a publication's freedom of expression," he said.

The senate passed a bill last week allocating $2,500 to public relations to be used for advertising in a publication which "prints on Wednesdays." This was a compromise from an earlier bill, vetoed by Student Body President Jeanne Belin, that specified the money for the FSView, the only FSU student publication to print solely on Wednesdays.

Belin said she vetoed the first bill because it limits where SG funds would be spent. There was also a question about the legality of a bill that names a private company to receive SG funds.

Sullivan called last Wednesday for approximately $11,000 in advertising money to go to FSView and $16,000 to go to the Flambeau, but Belin indicated last week that those figures were not final.

Since the end of the spring semester, about half of the SG ads have been running in the Flambeau and

SGs promote higher ed with "doors"

To symbolize Florida's nine public state universities' concern over the devastating effect any further budget cuts may have, the various student governments are holding an event called "Doors of Access" this morning.

The event, coordinated by the state's largest student lobbying group, Florida Student Association, will feature "doors" painted in the school colors.

"We don't want the doors of higher education to be slammed in our faces," Sean Sullivan, Florida State University student government public relations director, said Sunday.

The presentation, designed to support legislators who have backed education and inform citizens that higher education is in jeopardy, will take place on the steps of the Capitol this morning at 9 a.m.

Florida A&M University will present its door to state Rep. Al Lawson and FSU has chosen state Sen. Sherry Walker to receive its door. Both are Democrats representing Tallahassee.

Feeling warmer?

This Wednesday, William Parker, associate professor of geology at FSU, will explore the possibility that oceanfront property will soon become prime jetskiing waters in a talk entitled, "Global Warming: Will the Seas Rise?"

Parker's lecture is part of the free "Lunch and Learn" series held at the FSU Conference Center. The chowdown starts at noon, and if you don't bring your own brownbag, you can buy food and beverages there.

Wretched road to Rio

He touts himself as the candidate of change, but in reality George Bush the man appears immune to it. After all of his years in politics, Bush is the same old arrogant guy. You can dress him up—but you can't take him out.

Nowhere was this more evident than in his embarrassing performances last week in Panama and at the Rio Earth Summit.

There, relatives of the many civilians killed in the U.S. military invasion, and many others left homeless after the U.S. senselessly destroyed the neighborhoods surrounding Panamanian army barracks, showed up to protest Bush's appearance. The Panamanian police characteristically attacked the demonstrators for exercising their supposed new Bush-brought freedoms. They shot tear gas at them.

The President's surreal photo-op came to an abrupt halt when the wind, which unfortunately couldn't be controlled by the President's re-election campaign handlers, blew tear gas into the face of the hapless Bush and others attending the event.

Bush retreated to the safe confines of a U.S. military base. Making as little sense as usual, he did manage to articulate his warped interpretation of the event, saying the huge anti-American demonstration was, in fact, the work of a tiny band of left-wingers.

Give us a break George.

We would much rather the President acknowledge the pain and suffering inflicted on the Panamanian people because of his violent effort to bring his old friend Manuel Noriega to Miami for a political show trial; or castigated the Panamanian security forces for violating these people's rights to express their grievances. Instead we got the same old Bush bromides about reds.

Then it was off to Rio where the President managed to offend everyone including the only leader in the western world who doesn't treat Bush as though he were a drunken circus clown—England Prime Minister John Major.

Yes, the President went to Rio to affirm, preposterously, that he is the environmental President—and well, he's not. Of course, none of this went over well. Bush might just as well have thrown up on the laps of all the attending world leaders than go there to tout his environmental record. And we must thank Senator Al Gore for his pre-Rio warning that Bush would probably show up with a gaggle of coal executives, a la his famed Japan trip, for which Bush chose as his traveling companions several obscenely well-paid car execs.

What does it all mean? Beats us. It's always hard to fathom what Bush thinks he's doing. A rough guess is that he thought by going to Panama he would remind the American electorate of the great victory of the world's strongest military superpower against the tiny island. And by going to Rio he thought he could convince us that he was fighting anti-Americanism rather than defending his indefensible environmental policies.

Too bad the President didn't realize that his incompetent performance abroad only reinforces perceptions of his incompetent performance at home.

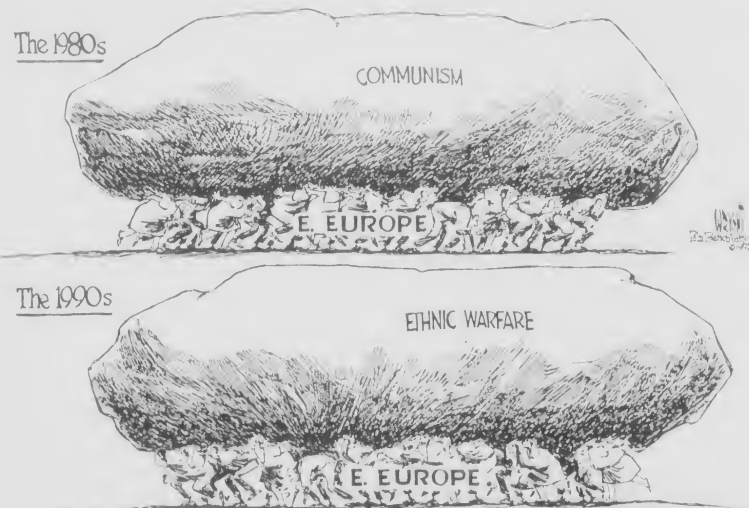

After all the criticism of his jaunts abroad, you'd think the President would have known better than to embroil himself in unproductive foreign affairs.

Some things just never change.

Save the children

Editor:

The Special Session on the budget provides Floridians with a special opportunity to express themselves on the crises facing Florida's children and families. The Legislature is, as never before, challenged to make critical decisions which will define our state for this next year and years ahead.

Of course, voters are never in support of paying more for government services which are perceived as inefficient and burdensome. But the need for prevention, intervention and treatment services has never been greater. While it's easy to criticize the "HRS bureaucracy," how can we deny that drug-exposed infants, maltreated toddlers, emotionally disturbed children or suicidal teenagers should receive the timely care they need to avoid horrible consequences in the future?

The key question facing our Legislature is this: Can Florida afford our children? Our kids rank 43rd on a composite of nine key indicators of child health and well-being. The nine states with which we share the bottom 10 are all poor states, yet Florida ranks 18th in per capita wealth. The gap between our wealth and the health of our children is the widest in America.

Legislators in poor states have an excuse for not investing in the prenatal care, preschool, education and treatment services their children need to be safe, secure and productive. Mississippi legislators have an alibi for their state's neglect—there are few places to turn for investment capital. Florida legislators have no valid alibi for the litany of neglect, the interminable waiting lists, and the demoralized state of parents who see their children's quality of life worsening.

Not acting to provide the health care, education and family strengthening services our children need today is passive child abuse. Just as we're obliged to report cases of maltreatment on an individual basis, we should likewise be obligated to express outrage when large groups of children are neglected by political leaders who choose to turn a deaf ear to their plight. At the core of the word "advocate" is "voca"—a voice. Failing to express our heartfelt concern about the conditions of children in our community is inexcusable.

Of course we're busy, but let's avoid regret at having not spoken when the time was right. Your active support of children can best be expressed by letting your neighbors, friends, colleagues and political leaders know that we can afford our children. What we cannot afford is the incessant neglect of their needs. Children: They're the only future we've got!

Deal with it

Editor:

After attending the Rodney King Symposium at the Florida State Conference Center last Wednesday, I became aware of a problem of substantial magnitude between the African-American and white communities. The two-hour symposium, established to discuss the Rodney King verdict, became a typical history class discussion about racism. Fueled by the verdict of the case, local communities fear a similar reaction to a case possibly headed to Leon County.

The symposium was intended to reason with the actions occurring in Los Angeles last month and to prevent such a rebellion in our community. Instead we ended up with a session about the oppression of African-Americans by the white race.

Although African-Americans once endured slavery, this is no longer the issue at hand. Blinded by the oppression of their ancestors, African-Americans cannot differentiate between the problems of their past and the problems of the present. Slavery was a terrible oppression of the African-American people; however, the white man is no longer at the center of the problem. White people can no longer abolish slavery or amend civil rights acts to amend the situation.

We must start in our homes, with children, educate everyone to what the problem really is. Racism runs in all directions and until this stops, nothing can be done. Needy families, broken homes, and single parents of any race (African-American, Hispanic, Native American, Asian or white) must be the focus of our attention. Education begins in the home and our ignorance should not be an excuse to tolerate the abuse of mankind. Suppression exists in all communities. It is not solely a skin color problem but a gender problem as well.

The Native American has been suppressed since before the discovery of America. They were stripped of their homeland and (due to African-Americans, whites and Asians, along with numerous other settlers of the vast land of the United States) they will never regain or even be justly compensated for this loss. Yet these people still tolerate the invaders of their homeland and should be examples to all people who feel the racism issue that problems should be dealt with.

We need to deal with our problems now, before what happened in Los Angeles occurs on an international scope. We should not complain, accuse or crucify, we must educate. We must not educate with segregation, rather implement integration of all races.

Death row inmate argues war experience was role in murder

BY CHE ODOM
STAFF WRITER

In 1968, Death Row inmate Larry Johnson voluntarily joined the Navy to serve two tours of duty in the Vietnam War. He was awarded two bronze stars, the Vietnam campaign medal for heroic acts in armed enemy conflict, and the national defense service medal during those tours.

But the price Johnson paid for those medals was dear.

After the war, Johnson was diagnosed as having severe psychological disorders stemming from his experience in Vietnam but was denied governmental assistance.

In 1980 he shot clerk James Hadden while robbing a gas station in Lee, Fla., and was sentenced to death.

Now, nearly a quarter of a century after joining the Navy, Johnson's awaiting execution on Florida's Death Row.

"Soon as he came back from Vietnam, he hadn't been back six months 'til we knew something was wrong with him," said Alice Morton, an aunt who helped raise Johnson. "The government should have helped him more when he got back."

'He had problems'

Last Tuesday, Gov. Lawton Chiles and his cabinet heard arguments and testimony regarding Johnson's application for executive clemency to have his death sentence commuted to life in prison.

"He wasn't totally to blame," said Morton outside the cabinet meeting room Tuesday morning. "He had problems."

Setting a precedent, Johnson's attorney, Steven Seliger, argues that his client suffers from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder as a result of his military service in Vietnam and therefore should be spared the death sentence. It is the first time that PTSD has been used as a legal argument in Florida.

PTSD is a psychological disorder caused by severe trauma often associated with war, sexual assault and other violent events. The syndrome is marked by, among other things, suicidal feelings and thoughts, fantasies of retaliation and destruction, extreme anger, and fits of rage.

"(Johnson) was sentenced at a time when PTSD was not fully understood or fully accepted by the medical and legal communities," Seliger said, explaining the thrust of the clemency argument.

No pity

Despite Seliger's claim that medical proof of PTSD is on Johnson's side, Jerry Blair, a state attorney from Madison county who prosecuted the case, is not convinced.

"I'm frustrated that thus far we've spent 13-and-a-half years on this case," said Blair, who also prosecuted executed murderer Theodore Bundy. "I'm also angry that there are people like Larry Joe Johnson who can commit a crime—a cold, calculated, premeditated crime—and then ask for mercy and seek to excuse his conduct this way," Blair told the cabinet last week.

Hadden's daughter, Jan Smith, claims she's still frightened by Johnson.

"When my father was killed it was like stepping into a nightmare," Smith said.

"I think that the death sentence (clemency) should be taken out and as soon as possible because I feel like if he's given another chance he can hurt another family just like he has ours," she added.

Death row inmate Larry Johnson says his military duty in Vietnam was responsible for his murdering James Hadden.

Bush's visit points up Panamanian love/hate relationship

BY AMY ELLERSON
NEWS EDITOR

PANAMA CITY, Panama—Just outside a U.S. military base here, reads a blunt message for all American soldiers to heed. Fuera Yankee it says, which translated loosely means "Go Home." It's not to be taken lightly.

Less than a mile down the hill from the tightly guarded base, children and men walk from car to car selling odds and ends and asking to wash peoples' windshields. Gringos are known for being the most gullible partly because so many are ridden with guilt and fear.

Bush

These roadside peddlers live in one of Panama City's most impoverished and notorious neighborhoods, El Chorrillo. Fighting was heaviest here during the invasion of Panama on Dec. 20, 1989. More than 2,500 families lost their homes and now those fortunate enough to have them watch their walls and roofs caving in around them. Tropical paradise this ain't.

Most people here probably hoped things would be better by now, two-and-a-half years after the U.S.

ousted the much-hated dictator Manuel Noriega and installed President Guillermo Endara. Although the country experienced nine percent economic growth last year, most Panamanians certainly haven't seen a bit of difference in their own lives.

So when President Bush came here last Thursday for five hours to praise Panama's moves toward democracy, talk was running pretty cheap among some circles. A feel-good speech by a foreign politician who had never even been to the country was just a little too much to bear.

Bush expectedly dismissed his staunch critics as left-wing "characters." This was supposed to be his day to shine, and brag about his so-called successes in Desert Storm and Just Cause, to get a little momentum behind him before he would have to face heated criticism at the Earth Summit in Brazil.

But he wouldn't get his chance to display a little good-old Texan machismo, at least not at a volatile downtown plaza that is often the scene of demonstrations. Before he could even reach the podium, secret service agents rushed him off the stage, holding bulletproof vests around him. Nearby protests had escalated into shootings, and tear gas used by Panamanian police drifted Bush's way.

Meanwhile approximately 40 reporters, who were not to be outscouted, waited at a nearby U.S. hospital in case Bush was shot. It seems the only people not fully aware of the violence Bush's visit would provoke were Bush and his staff, who reportedly assumed the crowds would be full of nothing but cheering flag-waving Panamanians.

They should have seen the writing on the wall; or is it that they refused to? A canceled Bush visit would have been a political defeat in this election year. So what if his expected arrival prompted the killing of U.S. Army Cpl. Zack Hernandez last Wednesday, two drive-by shootings at an airbase, and 16 demonstrations in just two days. U.S. soldiers were seen taking off their uniforms at the end of their workday last week in preparation of their ride home. And a 9 p.m. curfew is still enforced. For Bush, none of this looks good.

Bush, the politician, needs Panama as a showcase of his leadership. He needed to come to Panama looking like its savior, not its enemy. Operation Just Cause is supposed to be one of his successes. Now it just looks like another illusion, another wasted effort.

Many Panamanians and some Americans are starting to doubt that the country is any better off than it was with Noriega at the helm. Poverty and disease are still as rampant as ever and many on the streets say drugs are even more widespread than before—a gram of coke here is cheaper than beer. So much for Bush's drug war.

Despite any real lack of progress, however, most Panamanians still support U.S. military presence here. Recent polls show that 71 percent of the population does not want the 10,000 American soldiers stationed here to leave by the year 2000, which is mandated under the Panama Canal Treaty. That's understandable, since withdrawal of the troops will cause a loss of a whopping 12,000 jobs.

But it's not just about jobs. The U.S.'s long military presence in Panama has engendered a dependency that has left many fearful of the day when Panama will be abandoned, so to speak, and left on its own. These were the ones happily waving to Bush's motorcade last week and singing "Happy Birthday" to him in the plaza. Their countrymen's protest was an embarrassment to them and many were heard apologizing to Americans for the debacle that ensued.

Noting this attitude, critics of the Bush and Endara administrations rightly charge that as long as the U.S. military maintains its stay in Panama, the country will never be solvent. Before Panama can begin to prosper, it needs the chance to stand on its own two feet.

Speaking to a large military crowd just before flying to Brazil, Bush stood in front of two large U.S. and Panamanian flags. In front of him hung a banner that read, "One team, one fight." The aura was 100 percent good ol' American patriotism and Bush felt right at home. The army played "God Bless America" while children sat on their fathers' shoulders waving small flags and yelling out to Mrs. Bush.

Across the way, toward the downtown plaza where Bush had been evacuated, one could see dissipating smoke from protesting families who had lost loved ones in the 1989 invasion. The two scenes were as different as night and day. Bush's words cooed red, white and blue. He looked rejuvenated, like he did throughout the Persian Gulf War. He was hitting his stride once again.

"We appreciate Panama's move to democracy, and no tiny little left wing demonstration is going to change my opinion," Bush said, to the enjoyment of the crowd. "Democracy takes a while to solidify, to perfect. But I could sense in the crowd today determination . . . to perfect that. The day of the dictator is over."

Big talk. Empty words to some.

Transitional housing donation for the homeless is back on again

BY RON MATUS
STAFF WRITER

All systems are go again for a tenuous transitional housing project for the homeless following a compromise last week between homeless advocates, city officials and a local businessman.

"It looks real good," Cynthia Welsh, president-elect of the Tallahassee Coalition for the Homeless, said last week. "What we needed, I think, was reassurance that the project was moving along in a timely manner ... and that's what we got."

Philip Murphey offered 33 units of the Knights Inn he owns off North Monroe Street to the coalition more than a year ago, provided the coalition get the units off his property by July 1. But the coalition ran into a few timing snags with the city, making it impossible for it to meet the deadline.

That put the coalition's plans to convert the buildings into temporary housing for a dozen homeless families in jeopardy.

"It's one of those issues where you have competing time frames," Welsh said.

The snags were still there following last Wednesday's meeting. But the competing time frames and the threat they posed to the project were not.

The coalition still must wait for the city to give final approval to a $15,000 piece of property it has tentatively agreed to donate for the project. And it still must wait for the permitting and zoning processes to play out.

But city officials assured Murphey, who wants the lot cleared to make room for a new, 100-room Comfort Inn, that these things wouldn't be obstacles much longer. The city is expected to vote on the land deal June 24, and the project comes before the planning commission July 15.

Although that's past the deadline, it was good enough for Murphey. He extended his deadline to July 16.

"I'm very pleased," Murphey said. "I'm very confident that (the homeless coalition) will be cleared to do what they want to do ... and I'm happy to be able to give them the buildings."

Coalition officials breathed a sigh of relief, too.

The hotel units, which will cost $40,000 to move, play a major role in their plans to begin taking a comprehensive approach to Tallahassee's homeless problem. And Murphey has told them that if they don't move the buildings by the deadline, he will reluctantly move them or tear them down himself.

"(Murphey's) been very patient," Welsh said. "He didn't have to give us these units."

Coalition and city officials say now that the situation with Murphey has been resolved, the project is basically in the clear.

But, they added, they do expect some opposition at a public hearing early next month, which is required before the coalition can get a zoning exception for its project.

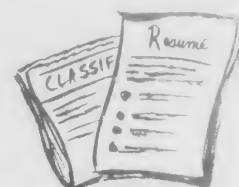

Welsh said that next week, homeless advocates will be canvassing neighborhoods near the corner of Danzler Drive and Magnolia Avenue—where the majority of hotel units are slated to be set up—to talk to residents about the project and any misconceptions they might have.

"I think there's going to be some opposition, but we have a good project," Welsh said. "I think we can convince anyone who's willing to talk to us."

Judy Truett, with the city's Department of Community Improvement, was confident about the future of the project too.

"There's a lot of ifs still, but one hurdle at a time and it becomes a reality," she said. "I'm very optimistic."

Boy drowns in drain pipe

An 8-year-old boy was swept into a drainage ditch while playing on a flooded playground. He was carried nearly 600 feet, where he was found drowned Friday afternoon, Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Annette Garrett said.

At 2 p.m., seven boys were playing on the playground and drainfield near Belle Vue Middle School after heavy rains. Kenny Pyles got too close to a drain pipe and was swept away in the swift current.

Ryan Gwaltney, 12, tried to rescue Pyles but he too was swept away into the 36-inch-diameter pipe. Tom McSoley, 23, of 2412 Oxford Road, was nearby and heard the children's screams. McSoley jumped into the six-foot deep water after the boys, but he was also sucked under by the force of the current.

"I was scared," McSoley said Sunday. "I didn't really understand what was happening and then I came popping out the other end (of the pipe)."

McSoley was pulled through the pipe for about 30 seconds before emerging out into the field, where he saw Gwaltney clinging to a tree until help arrived.

Both McSoley and Gwaltney suffered minor injuries. After officials searched for three hours, they found Pyles among the weeds in a ditch behind the Mac Paper building, 618 Mabry Avenue.

Gwaltney was also taken to the hospital for treatment of minor scratches and bruises and was released. Garrett said no further investigation will be conducted.

Alleged rapist arrested

An alleged rapist was arrested Sunday at the address written on a card he gave his victim, TPD spokesperson Phil Kiracofe said.

The attack occurred at 4:15 a.m. Sunday in an Indian Head Acres residence. A man got into the victim's house and jumped on her, then began choking and hitting her. He said he would use his gun if she tried to resist, though the victim did not see a gun. The man did apparently put a kitchen knife on the bed.

The man allegedly raped her, took money from the victim's purse, ripped a phone out of the wall, then left. The victim used another phone in her house to call police.

She told police she thought her attacker was a man who had done odd jobs around her house Saturday. He had given her a business card with an address on it. Police went to that address, which was the residence of a relative of his.

Police took Ronald Shelton Hudson, 38, of Woodville, to the Leon County Jail and is being held without bail. He has been charged with armed sexual battery, armed kidnapping, burglary of an occupied dwelling and armed robbery.

up 1969 pickup truck full of watermelons and corn. Robert Harris, also of Monticello, said he covers about a 100 miles a day trying to unload his supply of produce.

From his banterings with passers-by, it's obvious this has been a regular stop on his route for quite some time. "C'mon now," he shouted to a car paused at a stop sign. "You can't buy 'em from over there." The driver smiled and waved before pulling out into the steady stream of traffic heading into town.

"You learn how to read people in this kind of work," Harris said. "Don't go runnin' up to a car as soon as they pull in. You'll probably just scare 'em off. If they want something, they'll buy it."

Harris is a dignified man who finds pleasure in the simpler aspects of his work, but he maintains that it's a constant struggle filled with uncertainties.

"It's tough," he said. "You gotta spend a lot of your own money, and sometimes you don't get it back."

He made his first stop of the day at 7:30 a.m. with about 125 watermelons, and at 5:30 p.m. he counted almost 50 remaining.

"Look here," he said, nodding toward a bank of dark clouds rolling in. "I got to get on the other side of this thunderstorm and make one more stop before I go home."

weather. Obviously, a drought is no good but when it rains too much, the fruits split open on the vine and spoil.

Even if the farmer manages to harvest his produce before it receives too much exposure to rain, there's no guarantee people will stop in a storm when they could go to a supermarket instead.

Still, Birdwell said he enjoys the work because of the great variety of people he comes into contact with. As a woman scanned the three-for-$5 gargantuan melons, Birdwell said, "You try 'em, ma'am. You never eat a good cantaloupe 'til you tried one of these." Mixing generosity with persuasion, he pulled an ice-cold melon from a cooler and sliced her a sample. She smiled in approval and, wiping the juice from her chin, agreed to the deal.

A moment later, Johnny Johnson stopped with his wife and son to purchase a few melons.

"I like them because they're vine ripe and they're grown locally. I'm a local businessman and I like to help support others," he said.

A couple hundred yards down the road, in front of the Majik Market, another hawker has parked his beat-the food stamps.

The police report says three witnesses in the store told officers Franklin pushed Wallace in the chest, then Wallace hit Franklin once with a bat, dropping him to the floor.

Wallace, also 36, was charged with manslaughter and released from the Leon County Jail Thursday on $5,000 bond.

In a fiery and emotional speech that was interrupted repeatedly by applause, keynote speaker Rev. R. B. Holmes said there was already racial tension in Tallahassee before the event took place.

"Then we got word brother Franklin was brutally slaughtered," he said. "That's wrong, that's devilish, that's sickening."

Holmes said society has treated Black life as cheap for too long, and also stressed the importance of economic unfairness as one of the root causes of Black unrest.

He said banks often treat African-American customers differently than white ones, denying loans for businesses in Black communities, a practice called red-lining.

"If we find you are red-lining, we will call for a boycott in Tallahassee," Holmes stressed.

Holmes also said it's important to keep the force of economic damage in perspective.

"The rioters in Los Angeles cost $700 million, but the looters of the savings and loans cost $500 billion," he said.

Also speaking at the rally was TPD Deputy Chief Walter McNeil, who said he addressed the audience with a glad heart because important issues were finally being addressed.

McNeil said he believed the killing warranted a murder charge.

"The fact is, a sergeant made that decision to charge Wallace with manslaughter in the field," said McNeil. "I don't buy it and I can see you don't either."

Because the final determination of what charge to bring lies with the state attorney's office, McNeil urged the crowd to keep the pressure on.

"I'm going to do the right thing, but it's up to you folks to keep us honest," he said.

on PTSD to legitimize his legal argument and believes Johnson's case should be reviewed. On direct appeal to the Florida Supreme Court in 1980, Johnson's request for a retrial was denied. A petition for certiorari, a request for Johnson's court records for review, is presently pending in the United States Supreme Court.

David Niles, director of the Trauma Recovery and Counseling Center in Alexandria, Va., said Johnson's psychological disorder has become its own unique field of psychiatric study.

Niles echoed Morton's assertion that Vietnam veterans suffering from severe psychological disorders and Agent Orange did not receive adequate help from government agencies during the Vietnam era.

"It is my expert opinion that (Johnson) suffers from PTSD and PTSD unequivocally was part of the crime," Niles claims.

The local Lesbian and Gay Pride Week is held in conjunction with the nationwide celebration that marks the June 27 anniversary of the 1969 Stonewall rebellion in New York City. On that evening, hundreds of patrons of the Stonewall Bar fought back against what they said was unwarranted police aggression, setting off what many activists point to as the beginning of the gay rights movement in the U.S.

"Stonewall was really just the beginning, and part of the festivals going on all over the nation is devoted to commemorating that event," Nixon said. "Pride Week also serves to draw the gay community together to share in cultural and social events and take pride in our heritage."

Here's a rundown of the series of events Lesbian and Gay Pride Week include:

- Monday, June 15—Video Night at the Leon County Public Library Auditorium Room A, 6:30 p.m. Features four short videos such as coming-out stories and romances.

- Tuesday, June 16—Music Night at Gianni's Cafe on Tennessee Street, 8 p.m. Features local bands Stop the Madness and Venus Envoy.

- Wednesday, June 17—Reading and Performance Night at the United Church on Mahan Drive, 8 p.m.
- Thursday, June 18—Community Forum: Common Issues of Oppression, at the Florida State University School of Law, Room 241, 7 p.m.

- Friday, June 19—Pot Luck Dinner and dance at the Unitarian Church on Meridian Road. Dinner at 7 p.m. Dance, featuring Tryst, at 9 p.m.

- Saturday, June 20—Rally and March. Gathering on the steps of the Old Capital Building at 11:30 a.m. Rally and March at noon to Myers Park, followed by a picnic at 2 p.m.

All events are free and open to the public. Nixon said last year's rally drew more than 400 people from all over the state, with some coming in from as far away as Atlanta.

"It's really good that we have a rallying place where gays and lesbians have a chance to see one another, how many we are and how wonderful and diverse we are," said Maureen Malvern, a co-organizer of the week's events.

"It's also really helpful for the rest of the community to see us because we've had to remain so hidden before," she added. "The hiddenness has helped us create a slightly different culture, which is exciting to explore."

KAPLAN MCAT PREP

Think of it as CROSS-TRAINING for the MIND
.....

The principle: the more ways you have of learning something, the better you'll understand it. Academic types call this "multi-modal learning." At Kaplan Test Prep, we call it cross training for the mind.

At Kaplan, we integrate more different learning approaches than any other program. When you train for the MCAT with us, you'll have access to live classes, audio reinforcements, academic and strategy clinics, home study notes and individual tutoring.

You'll take practice tests that run the gamut from topic drills to full-length released exams, from taped self-tests to a simulated MCAT.

With this kind of training, no wonder Kaplan produces more top MCAT scores and prepares more med school candidates than all other courses combined.

Spy thriller Patriot Games gets up close and personal

BY JOSH MITCHELL
STAFF WRITER

Florida Flambeau
review

Military-minded moviegoers expecting more of the same when standing in line to see Patriot Games—billed as a sequel to last year's blockbuster Cold War epic, The Hunt for Red October—won't quite get it. This time, it's personal. In fact, there's little connection or sense of transition at all between the two movies other than central character Jack Ryan.

Harrison Ford (replacing Alec Baldwin from the original) delivers another quality performance starring as Ryan, a former adviser to the CIA who, after helping liberate a defecting Soviet submarine captain in the first movie, now must adjust to a post-Commie-threat lifestyle by teaching military history at the Naval Academy in Annapolis.

The film's action gets underway while Ryan is lecturing and vacationing with his family in London. In the wrong place at the wrong time following a seminar, Ryan heroically intervenes in an assassination attempt on some medium grade British royalty by what is first presumed to be a band of Irish Republican Army guerrillas. During the ensuing melee, Ryan ends up killing the younger brother of assassin Sean Miller (Sean Bean—The Field, Lorna Doone), who gives Ryan the look of death and immediately becomes obsessed with destroying Ryan and his family. Miller even puts his terrorist business on the back burner in order to wax these beautiful people.

Spy thriller Patriot Games gets up close and personal

BY JOSH MITCHELL
STAFF WRITER

Military-minded moviegoers expecting more of the same when standing in line to see Patriot Games—billed as a sequel to last year's blockbuster Cold War epic, The Hunt for Red October—won't quite get it. This time, it's personal. In fact, there's little connection or sense of transition at all between the two movies other than central character Jack Ryan.

Harrison Ford (replacing Alec Baldwin from the original) delivers another quality performance starring as Ryan, a former adviser to the CIA who, after helping liberate a defecting Soviet submarine captain in the first movie, now must adjust to a post-Commie-threat lifestyle by teaching military history at the Naval Academy in Annapolis.

The film's action gets underway while Ryan is lecturing and vacationing with his family in London. In the wrong place at the wrong time following a seminar, Ryan heroically intervenes in an assassination attempt on some medium grade British royalty by what is first presumed to be a band of Irish Republican Army guerillas. During the ensuing melee, Ryan ends up killing the younger brother of assassin Sean Miller (Sean Bean—The Field, Lorna Doone), who gives Ryan the look of death and immediately becomes obsessed with destroying Ryan and his family. Miller even puts his terrorist business on the back burner in order to wax these beautiful people.

Skulking the Ryans all the way back to America, Miller takes stabs at their lives in between assignments with his band of terrorists, who who we later learn are so radical—they kill royalty and civilians—the regular IRA has disowned them. These guys might not be as formidable as the entire Red Army machine, but they're not exactly selling cookies for charity either.

Returning from the original is James Earl Jones (say, looks a little like Colin Powell, doesn't he?) as Admiral James Greer, the CIA director who comes to the aid of Ryan by coolly offering to vaporize anyone who gives Ryan the slightest annoyance. When not using his high resolution satellite to gaze down the shirts of women outside all over the world, Greer paces his office frantically looking for something or someone to fire bomb.

Again "I'm pretty sure I'll be typecast any day now" Archer, plays Ryan's wife Cathy to the worn out and extremely annoying theme of "wife who wants her husband to chuck his life's work because it's dangerous."

Finally, Richard Harris, aging like a burlap bag and playing the part of IRA big shot Paddy O'Neil, adds his usual charm to the film and plays the only multi-faceted character in the movie as he tries to mediate between protectionism of the American ideal and the complicated plight of Northern Ireland.

Though not nearly as action packed as The Hunt for Red October, Patriot Games is clearly the more multi-dimensional film. The movie eventually deteriorates into a one-on-one pride thing, but somehow manages to intrigue with just the right dose of espionage and examples of indiscriminate carnage we want to believe the CIA is really capable of. True, the world is running low on countries to blow up and evil villains aren't as easy to spot, but I guess that's the price Hollywood has to pay for peace. And maybe people will start bringing their brains to the theater again.

Patriot Games is currently showing at Capitol Cinemas and Oak Lake 6.

Graduates return to share their literary insights Tuesday night

BY DARRYL DOCKSTADER

FLAMBEAU WRITER

If you need any proof that there is life after the post-graduate grind, just mosey on down to the Grand Finale Tuesday night to hear two survivors tell their literary war stories. Ray McDaniel's poetry and Scott Yarbrough's fiction will be featured in this week's installment of the Florida State English Department 1992 Summer Reading series.

McDaniel is a recent graduate of FSU who originally moved to Tallahassee to seek a degree in English and wound up claiming degrees in anthropology and philosophy as well.

McDaniel now works for Arts Services, Inc. in West Palm Beach, and describes his job duties as "doing combat with the Division of Cultural Affairs and trying to secure rights for the National Endowment for the Arts and other such things."

McDaniel will read selections from what he terms his "post-graduation apocalyptic poetry."

"Immediately after graduating, the world changed completely," he said in an interview last week. "I entered a completely different universe of social interaction and it's really shown up in how I write. I think what I've done previously was a lot more comfortable and safe. My writing is now a little more dangerous and black. It's no longer coming from the perspective of a fat, happy college kid. It now has more perspective and the teeth are a little bit sharper."

Yarbrough is also an FSU alumnus. He received his MA in creative writing and worked as a teaching assistant in the English department along the way. Yarbrough plans on pursuing a Ph.D in literature at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa this Fall.

Yarbrough was unavailable for comment, but those familiar with his work call his fiction friendly and fun, and laud his sense of humor.

Ray McDaniel and Scott Yarbrough get wordy Tuesday night at the Grand Finale. The show starts at 8 p.m. and is free to all.

ARTS BRIEF

Works by the second artist in the "Photos at the Airport" exhibit, Brian Crum, are on display beginning today through July 17 at the Tallahassee Regional Airport. The Airport Gallery is located in the central lobby.

A group of Florida State visual art students will present a group project called "Lotto Nothing For Education" Wednesday in the FSU Student Union from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. The project is meant to bring public attention to the group's contention that the lottery is no solution to the problem of funding education. "Lotto Nothing" will also be on display at the Capitol Thursday from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your confidence grows as you rack up impressive new accomplishments beginning in August. A well-deserved raise or promotion boosts your financial security next November. Travel for business or a family reunion in December. A timely investment or real estate purchase early in 1993 will pay big dividends in the years to come. New career or community recognition is featured next April. Reward loyal subordinates.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Jim Belushi, actress Helen Hunt, country singer Waylon Jennings, slugger Wade Boggs.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some pleasing but startling changes are on the horizon. Taking an unconventional approach will solve an old problem. Refuse to be rushed into making important decisions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Shower affection and treats on your favorite people. New doors open to you. Your rapport with VIPs is strong. Avoid the emotional quicksands that surround a troubled relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A day of fairy tales and half-truths; stick to the straight and narrow path. A serious romantic discussion is best postponed. Act confident of loved one's affection and loyalty.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Treat everyone in an extra-friendly manner today. Influential people are close by and will take notice. A job offer could necessitate a move to another city.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Today's forecast includes both a boost in popularity and participation in a thought provoking dialogue. State your case concisely; an authority figure will be impressed. Postpone romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cooperating, not taking the lead, will put you on the track to success now. If you work hard, you can escape criticism. Travel snags are possible—depend on public transportation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): To advance your key interests, you must reach a wider audience. Minor delays and complications may await you. Push on there is bound to be a big payoff! Attend a group gathering tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your way of speaking has the power to attract or repel today. Chime in when you agree with what others are saying and you will gain in stature. Avoid get-rich-quick schemes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do more than your share if your efforts will promote team effort. Profits will swell as a direct result. Take advantage of an opportunity for longdistance travel.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Seek favors from influential people; useful agreements can be negotiated behind closed doors. Some surprising news might throw you. Withhold comment until you have all the facts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Downplaying your own role at work while praising others' contributions is a smart move today. The aftermath may be improved communication between co-workers.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Guard against dissipating your energy and time today. Too many distractions or detours could mean low productivity. A sudden emotional tidal wave could threaten a romantic relationship. Stay calm.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are energetic and enthusiastic with a terrific gift of gab. Although these youngsters are generous with their possessions, they generally put their own career, financial and romantic desires ahead of everything else. Encourage these Geminis to consider the effects of the decisions they make on their loved ones. Affectionate and kindhearted, these children will want to do the right thing.

Local boys Casey Weldon and Brad Culpepper host camp for kids

BY MARK NESSMITH
SPORTS EDITOR

Local boys-made good Brad Culpepper and Casey Weldon are hoping to give something back to their community by hosting an instructional football camp for kids.

"It's something to put back into the city. I got a lot of enjoyment playing Little League baseball, soccer, flag football and basketball. I played everything through the city," Culpepper said Sunday.

The camp, which begins today and runs through Thursday, will help kids (ages nine to 13) hone their gridiron skills. And according to Culpepper, a former Florida Gator and recent NFL draftee, on-field skills aren't the only thing campers will take home.

Brad Culpepper (l) and Casey Weldon (r) want to help area kids.

"I don't only want to stress athletics. I also want to stress a good attitude in academics, at your home and just staying out of trouble," said Culpepper, who recently returned from one of the Minnesota Vikings' mini-camps.

The Florida Flambeau was unable to contact Weldon for comment.

Len Harvey, a physical trainer who played football for Florida State and the New Orleans Saints, is organizing the camp with Culpepper and Weldon. He said all they're extremely excited about the opportunity to work with area youths.

"We're going to try to project to young people a kind of an All American image," Harvey said. "Casey and Brad are going to talk about drugs. And Brad's really going to hit on academics."

Harvey said despite its motivational aspect, the camp's main emphasis will still be on football.

"This camp is to teach young athletes the fundamentals of football along with strength-training and conditioning," he said. "We're trying to tell these young people that, if they want to get to where Brad and Casey are at, these are some of the things they should work on."

Culpepper added that he believes kids benefit more from involvement in worthwhile activities than from overt sermons about "saying no to drugs."

"We're going to stress the fun activities that keep you off the streets or keep you away from drugs and how successful you can be in the sporting arena and in the class room," he said.

Culpepper, Weldon and Harvey will be the main instructors but campers can also expect to learn from guest instructors such as Glenn Bass, a local minister who played 11 seasons with the NFL's Buffalo Bills.

Culpepper and Harvey both said they wish a similar opportunity had been available when they were young.

"I always thought that if I had had some good training at an early age, it could have made a difference in my college and pro career," Harvey said.

Culpepper and Weldon's four-day camp will be held at the Leon High School field. Kids should wear shorts, T-shirts and cleats. Camp tuition is $60 and proof of insurance and a parent's signature are required. Kids who miss the first day are welcome to come join up Tuesday (their tuition will be $45). Call 893-3412 for additional information.

NBA FINALS

Bulls win; Jordan scores second MVP

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

CHICAGO—The Chicago Bulls, rallying from a 17-point third-quarter deficit, defeated the Portland Trail Blazers 97-93 Sunday night to capture their second consecutive NBA championship, this one in dramatic fashion.

The Bulls, winning the series 4-2, became just the fourth NBA franchise to repeat as champions but the third to do it in the past six seasons. The Lakers captured the title in 1986-87 and 1987-88 and the Detroit Pistons in 1988-89 and 1989-90 before Chicago ran away with its first last season. The Boston Celtics are the only other franchise to repeat.

Michael Jordan led all scorers with 33 points, including 10 of his team's final 12, and was named the Most Valuable Player of the Finals for the second straight year. But it was a total team effort for the Bulls that carried them through this time, touching a wild celebration inside Chicago Stadium.

Scottie Pippen added 24 points for Chicago, which last year won the title on the road, in Los Angeles. The Bulls outscored Portland 33-14 in the fourth quarter.

Clyde Drexler and Jerome Kersey paced the Trail Blazers with 24 points apiece, while Terry Porter contributed 22. Portland has fallen in the Finals twice in the last three years. They were beaten by Detroit in 1990.

The Trail Blazers led nearly the entire way, making a strong bid for a Game 7. They built a 15-point advantage midway through the second quarter, fought off a Chicago charge just before the half and extended the margin to 17 late in the third.

Jordan converted a layup to close out the third, making it 79-64. And the wheels then fell off for Portland in the fourth.

Saints and Sinners

Protestors' prayers went ignored Monday night as the Tallahassee Lesbian and Gay Film Festival went on as scheduled at the Leon County Public Library. For the most part, people on opposing sides of the issue substituted smiles for shouts and each side claimed victory over the other. And despite protest, filmgoers marched past picketers and partook in the festival's offerings. See our story on page 5 for more.

With the Florida Legislature continuing to wrangle and haggle as the June 30 budget deadline looms nearer, it looks more and more like a $300-$500 million tax increase will be accompanied by some sort of tuition raise, education officials say.

But those dollars would only help state universities keep up as more students pour into the system, rather than going toward enhancement.

"You won't see any improvement in areas students care about most," Board of Regents spokesperson Pat Riordan said Tuesday. Things like class size and the number of classes and sections offered are not likely to get better, he said.

Last week a supplemental bill that would have raised tuition by nearly $39 million—which roughly corresponds to a 15 percent in-state and 25 percent out-of-state increase for students—failed in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Scott Jenkins, executive director of the student lobbying organization Florida Student Association, said FSA will try to convince Senate Republicans that the deal doesn't look as palatable as it might appear at first, even though it keeps the tax increases down.

"Tuition is a tax on students and families," Jenkins said Tuesday.

But Jenkins said if a tuition increase is approved, FSA will lobby to put half the money into the classroom, such as more professors and more sections; 25 percent of the fees into undergraduate financial aid; and the remaining 25 percent toward fee waivers for graduate students.

"If we're going to take a tuition increase, we're going to hit them hard about where it goes," Jenkins said.

On the other side of the Legislature, the House has passed a supplemental budget with some $489 million in it, with $300 million of that going to all levels of education.

Students hopeful about race relations council

Student leaders, representing more than a quarter of Leon County's population, have high hopes for the recently created Tallahassee Community Relations Council formed to improve area race relations.

The brainchild of Tallahassee Chief of Police Mel Tucker, three seats on the 20-member organization were set aside for student representatives. The plan was approved by city commissioners June 10.

"Students throughout history have been at the forefront of progressive issues," said Florida State University student body president Jeanne Behn.

Women leaders voice support for Yeakel

If the conversation at a Monday fundraiser for Pennsylvania Democratic senate nominee Lynn Yeakel is any indication, women candidates in this year's elections have something to offer an electorate hungry for change.

Yeakel, in Tallahassee raising support for her senate race against Republican incumbent Arlen Specter, has been pointed to by commentators and analysts as the archetype of women candidates around the country riding a wave of discontent with politics as usual.

"People all over the country are very interested in this race because of the symbolism," Yeakel said in an interview at the fundraiser, which was held at the home of former state Representative George Sheldon.

"Arlen Specter symbolizes the ultimate in a powerful, entrenched incumbent who represents the past era and the failed policies we're now dealing with.

"I represent the future and new leadership. People all over the country are hoping that we will see new leadership in Washington this year."

Community activist

Yeakel spent the past 20 years doing community work, including a stint as founder and chief executive of Women's Way, a Pennsylvania coalition organization which provides a variety of services from job training to a domestic violence shelter.

She believes those experiences are exactly what is needed in politics today. And many Pennsylvania voters seem to agree—polls show Yeakel tied with Specter at 40 percent.

According to Yeakel, people who want change are more likely to turn to female candidates nowadays.

"This is a year when people in general, women and men, are very committed to change," Yeakel said. "We're going to see positive outcomes for women all over the country."

City to review drainage system

A complete review of the city's drainage system has been ordered by Tallahassee Mayor Bob Hightower in response to the drowning of 8-year-old Kenny Pyles.

In a memorandum sent to City Manager Dan Kleman last week, Hightower asked for a listing of all drainage runs in the city, whether they are open or have a grate, and a list of drainage pipes for which a grate was in place and later removed. The review will focus on drainage runs near schools and parks.

"At the end of this review, I want to be certain that our system both prevents flooding and is safe for the community," Hightower said in a news release.

The city has set up two hotline numbers, 599-8740 and 599-8741, where people can leave a recorded message to report any drainage situation they believe to be hazardous.

The city safety officer and public works department are reviewing the incident, as well as the drainage system serving Belle Vue Middle School.

Sexual battery attempted

A Tallahassee woman walking along the jogging trail at Myers Park was attacked by a teenage boy at 9 a.m. Wednesday, Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Annette Garnett said.

The 37-year-old victim told officers she saw the teen standing on one of the exercise trail's bridges. She continued past him to work out at the trail's station No. 4, where she went to exercise.

She saw him again as he walked past her before he turned off onto a smaller path. She continued along the trail for about 25 feet when the teenager allegedly tackled her from behind, throwing her off the trail into the woods. The assailant then sat on top of the victim, pinned her arms by her sides and covered her face with his hands.

After the victim struggled, screamed and kicked, the attacker gave up and fled from the area. A police K 9 unit tried unsuccessfully to track the suspect.

The victim described her attacker as a 16- or 17-year-old white male, 5-foot-11-inches tall and weighing 140 pounds. At the time, he was wearing a blue baseball cap turned backwards, a white T-shirt with print on the front and blue knee-length shorts.

Auto theft arrest

A Tallahassee man was arrested Tuesday night after he ran a red light in a stolen car and police discovered his driver's license had already been suspended 10 times, Garrett said.

Eric Duane McRoberts, 21, of 2823 Botany Place, ran the red light at the intersection of Brevard and Bronough streets at 10:22 p.m. while driving a 1988 Dodge Daytona.

When McRoberts was stopped he gave the officer a false name and made up a story about buying the Daytona. But a computer check showed the car had been reported stolen on May 14.

McRoberts was charged with grand theft auto, resisting arrest, numerous traffic violations, and four outstanding warrants for violation of his probation. He was taken to the Leon County Jail where he is being held without bond.

Benefit for tank farm fighter set for Saturday

BY RON MATUS
STAFF WRITER

Bob Rackleff has spent the past three years fighting Texaco's plans to build a gasoline tank farm in Jefferson County because of the threat it poses to the environment. But now the battle is posing a serious threat to his pocketbook, too.

Two months ago, Rackleff and his wife JoEllyn were ordered by a judge to pay $32,000 worth of court costs—a whopper of a bill they say they don't have the cash to cover.

To help the Rackleffs out, several local bands are holding a benefit concert and dance Saturday in Tallahassee's American Legion Hall. Organizers say it's the least they could do.

"(Bob and JoEllyn Rackleff) have been the lifeblood of the fight," Gordon Scott, the benefit's organizer and long-time tank farm opponent, said Tuesday. "They've carried the ball for us when everyone else has been tired."

The ruling handed down in April by Circuit Court Judge Kevin Davey against the Rackleffs stems from an unsuccessful lawsuit the couple filed against Texaco several years ago. The suit charged that the tank farm, slated for the tiny historic town of Lloyd, was a public and private nuisance and a violation of Jefferson County's comprehensive growth plan.

It was just one of many salvos Bob Rackleff fired at the tank farm, which he and other opponents have fought mainly because of the threat it poses to North Florida drinking water.

The tank farm has also been of concern to Leon County environmentalists and government officials because a pipeline connecting it to another facility in Bainbridge, Ga. would have crossed 17 miles of environmentally sensitive land in northeastern Leon County.

The project was put on hold earlier this year after a federal judge upheld a ruling by the Leon County Commission that the proposed Colonial Co. pipeline was in violation of Leon County's comprehensive growth plan.

Whether the company will seek an amendment to the comp plan, re-route the project around Leon County or drop it altogether is still up in the air. And because Texaco's tank farm hinges on the pipeline, its fate is up in the air, too.

For the time being, Rackleff is concerned about Davey's ruling, which besides being costly to him personally may also set a dangerous precedent for environmental activists throughout the state. The $36,000 it demands Rackleff pay is basically to cover the costs of expert witnesses Texaco called to testify during the trial.

"The ruling itself was the judicial equivalent of the lambada," Rackleff said, adding that it is being appealed. "It was grotesque and dirty."

According to Rick Johnson, a local attorney who represents Rackleff, the Legislature exempted comprehensive planning lawsuits from a law that allows parties who win civil cases to recoup some of their court costs from the losers.

It did so, he said, so ordinary citizens without big bucks could challenge local governments that may be skirting growth management laws or allowing others to skirt them. But Davey's ruling may change all that.

"Now Texaco and all the other polluters can do this," said Johnson, who is also the Flambeau's general counsel. "They can spend two or three times that much on expert witness testimony so they can really terrorize anybody who wants to protect their neighborhood."

Jim Murley, executive director of 1000 Friends of Florida, an environmental group that monitors growth management issues, agreed the ruling could be damaging—but only if it stands.

"I think it's such a bad decision that there's an even bigger chance it could be overturned," he said Wednesday in a phone interview from Miami.

In the meantime, though, Rackleff has had to take out a $20,000 personal loan to post with the court pending outcome of the appeal. Having to pay the entire $36,000 bill, he added, "would be a tremendous financial hardship."

"We don't have the cash," he said. "We're deeply grateful for the help of these musicians."

The benefit concert and dance for Bob and JoEllyn's defense fund begins Saturday at 7 p.m. at the American Legion Hall at Lake Ella. Performing will be Jon Copps and Friends, The Big Bend Ramblers, The Shamrocks, Randy Webster, The Road Kills, Eric Glatz and Best of Show. Suggested donation is $5.

Rackleff and other tank farm opponents have fought Texaco's project mainly because of the threat it poses to North Florida drinking water.

who believes the current state of local race relations leaves much to be desired.

"This will allow the Black and white community to communicate better," she said Wednesday.

Florida A&M University Student Body President Roderick Stovall agreed.

"Communication is the catalyst we need to change ignorance into understanding," he said Wednesday.

Stovall said he believes many peoples' impressions of other races are based on assumptions and falsehoods, and better contact between the races is a big first step in improving relations.

Tucker said at the June 10 commission meeting he sees the need for the council in light of local and national surveys indicating many people still see racism as a significant problem. Meetings with minority citizens in Tallahassee recently convinced him the historical approach to community race problems has not been fully effective, he added.

Members of the council will come from a variety of local organizations representing business, minority, law enforcement, media and student interests.

In addition to FAMU and FSU, Tallahassee Community College will also have a seat on the council. TCC will not be able to actively participate until the fall, according to coordinator for student programs Jeb Blackburn, because all eight of its elected student government officials are out of town over the summer.

According to information from the Tallahassee Leon County Planning Department, students comprise a large segment of Tallahassee's population. Although a precise breakdown is difficult due to the fact many students do not live in Tallahassee year-round, over 48,000 were enrolled at the three schools in Fall 1991.

Figures for 1991 show a total population of 198,000 in Leon County, with 127,000 of those living within the Tallahassee city limits.

In addition to improving communication, both Stovall and Belin believe there are other ways the TCRC can improve local race relations, including promoting cultural events that appeal to more than one particular race.

They also hope some sort of formal structure can be set up to address complaints about government or law enforcement problems.

"This council will be a tool to help calm things down—for both races," Stovall said.

Sounds like...

Twenty years ago yesterday, a team of burglars on the payroll of Richard Nixon's Committee to Re-Elect the President—fondly known as CREEP—were arrested as they tried to plant bugging devices on the phones of Democratic party officials in their Watergate Hotel offices in Washington, D.C.

The scandal snowballed as a stunned and disgusted nation learned that the Watergate break-in was only the tip of the Nixon White House's criminal iceberg. It led of course to Nixon's resignation, and he was later named by Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski as an "unindicted co-conspirator."

It was the closest any U.S. President has come to being formally indicted while in office.

What an irony then that only a day prior to the 20th anniversary of the Watergate break-in, Iran prosecutor Lawrence Walsh's office chose to issue an indictment of Ronald Reagan's Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. Weinberger is charged with trying to cover up the role of then-President Ronald Reagan in authorizing the illegal shipments of sophisticated American weapons to Iran.

And what a double irony that Walsh's office is rumored to be considering the indictment of Ronald Reagan himself.

As usual, Republican politicians in Washington, who usually can't speak a sentence without saying "law and order," are calling for Walsh's head. They charge that the special prosecutors office is "out of control," that Congress needs to pass a law dispensing with the Special Prosecutor's office.

As Saturday Night Live's church lady might say, "How convenient."

How convenient indeed. How convenient that those calling most loudly for the prosecution of "rioters" in Los Angeles can say with a straight face that high officials who break the law should be given preferential treatment by the system which they never tire of telling us works so well.

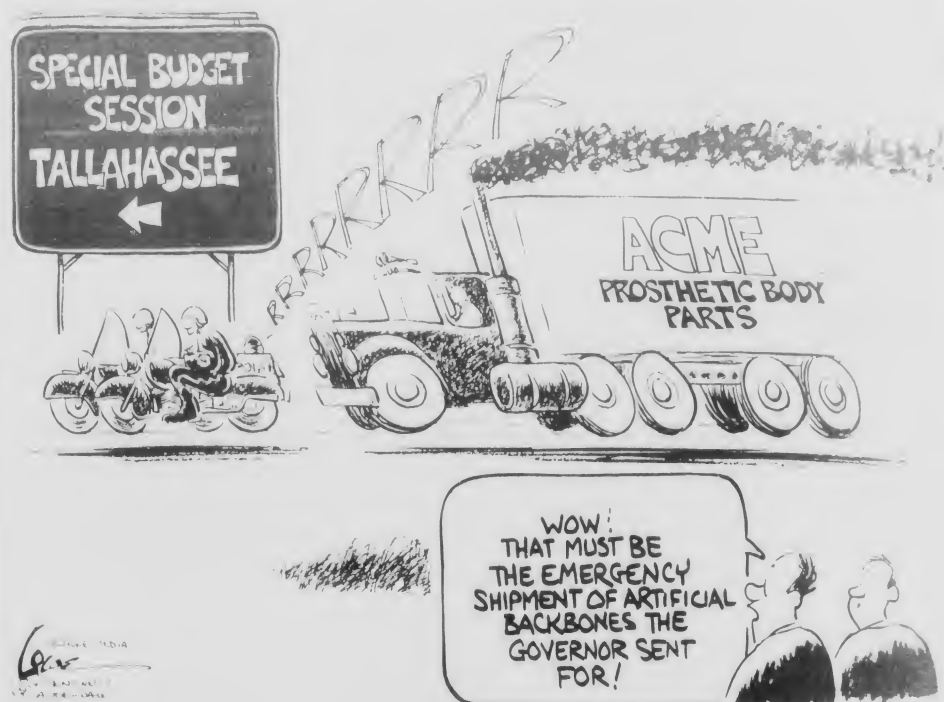

How convenient for them not to point out that special prosecutor Walsh is himself a lifelong conservative Republican! Ed Meese was Attorney General during the time of the Iran-Contra affair, a political crony of the President and a participant in the cover-up. Hence, Meese couldn't possibly have been objective in investigating the scandal. How convenient for them to ignore the fact that the criminal role of the U.S. Attorney General in the Watergate scandal led to the creation of the special prosecutor's office in the first place.

Clearly not everyone has learned the supposed lesson of Watergate and the fall of Richard Nixon: No one should be above the law. And this includes Ronald Reagan—and George Bush.

LETTERS

Flawed logic

Editor:

I am responding to Phoebe Spooner's letter, printed in the June 15 edition of your paper. There are some points which I believe demand attention.

To begin with, it appears that Ms. Spooner's definition of racism is flawed. She contends that "racism runs in all directions," preventing us from solving the problems of "needy families, broken homes and single parents" of all racial groups. While it is true that prejudice runs in all directions, it is a common mistake, particularly for white liberals, to think of "racism" and "prejudice" as synonymous terms. If prejudice is the prejudgment of one individual by another individual, then racism is "institutionalized prejudice" or "prejudice plus power." Racism is the control of one collective racial group by another racial group, maintained by an unequal division of influence and resources (power).

Ms. Spooner suggests that African-Americans are "blinded" and "cannot differentiate between the problems of their past and the problems of the present." She states that, since slavery has been abolished, "the white man is no longer at the center of the problem." Were the liberal myth of equal educational opportunity true, this argument might have some substance. But unfortunately it denies the transgenerational nature of racism. Africans were oppressed by slavery for about 250 years, and were oppressed by Jim Crow, de facto slavery for another 100 years, during which time they suffered political disenfranchisement, economic deprivation, social exclusion, cultural assimilation and psychological trauma. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 did eliminate some of the political and social barriers, but the economic, cultural and psychological barriers have rarely been acknowledged, let alone eliminated.

Even President Lyndon Johnson recognized this reality when he said, "You do not take a man who, for years, has been hobbled by chains, liberate him, bring him to the starting line of a race, saying, 'you are free to compete with all the others,' and still justly believe you have been completely fair."

It is true that other groups suffer in this country. It is true that women suffer a unique brand of oppression that has little to do with racism. And it is true that whites suffer economic poverty in this country as do African-Americans and Hispanics. However, statistics clearly reveal that the average African-American endures far more needless suffering than does the average white. For 350 years African-Americans were exploited and punished as a group. Why, then is it unreasonable for them to ask for compensation as a group?

As for Ms. Spooner's solution to these problems, to "educate" and "implement integration of all races," Kwame Ture (Stokely Carmichael) said it best when he claimed that the goal of integration at this time was "irrelevant." Racism is not an issue of attitudes. It is an issue of power, and education alone will never rectify the balance of power in this society.

A trip for Bush

Editor:

Is it just me or does anyone else think President Bush showed incredible naivete by visiting Panama less than three years after he ordered a military invasion of that country? Has the White House lost all sense of reality by not realizing that the friends and families of the estimated 2,000 dead are still quite furious at the President? Did President Bush actually believe the Panamanians would welcome him with open arms and American flags waving in the air?

Hey George, I have a ticket to Baghdad. Are you interested?

Say yes to gaming

Editor:

There's nothing wrong with the people of Florida trying to get a helping hand by collecting taxes from gambling. There's plenty wrong with putting all the responsibility of cleaning up the environment and renovating our economy on the heads of its citizens.

Raising taxes on Floridians has been the only answer legislators have had for too long. It's time we made the gaming laws fair in the state of Florida, so that we can tax casinos, instead of ourselves.

Florida has not other major industry. Tourism is it. Compete or lose—it's that simple.

English papers: From dirt to delightful and Di is hot news

BY D.K. ROBERTS

SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

British print journalism is a kind of jerry-rigged monster like one of those heraldic beasts with the head of a dragon, the tail of a lion, the hooves of a bull, the wings of an eagle, the teeth of a Rottweiler, the heart of a vulture and the brain of a gnat.

British newspapers are simultaneously one of the great glories of this country and one of its worst embarrassments. There is no written constitution in Britain, so there is no First Amendment, no enshrined free press. There is instead the tradition of a free press and a social climate of rabid cynicism. The newspapers pick their way along a vertiginous path between spectacular scoops, libel, baroque fabrication and social engineering.

The national "qualities"—The Guardian, The Independent, The Daily Telegraph, The Financial Times, The Times—are literate even in their viciousness. The tabloids—The Sun, The Star, The Mail, The Mirror, The News of the World, and now the once-august Sunday Times—with their circulations in the millions and their vocabularies barely in double digits, veer dizzily between National Enquirer stories about space aliens from Planet Elvis and exposes of drug use. They are stupid, but they are read. Such is the place of newspapers in British life (this in a country with more television sets and VCRs per capita than the U.S.) that the BBC radio's Today Program, the grandparent of NPR's "Morning Edition," always has a segment called "What the Papers Say."

At the moment, the newspapers are in the middle of the sort of scandal that might endanger the practice of a free press in this country. The revelations, or the allegations, or the false charges (depending on where you stand) that the Princess of Wales is (or was) a wacked-out bulimic who tried to kill herself has exploded into a bloody battle for the moral high ground in press responsibility. The fervor and outrage dedicated to this possibly interesting, possibly just trashy, story makes the American outcry over Arthur Ashe's forced confession to being HIV-positive look pale and uninteresting.

The root of the frenzy is a book by rat-packer (the British term for journalists who feed off royal stories) Andrew Morton called Diana: Her True Story. The author insists that the book was written out of interviews with Diana's close friends, her sisters Jane and Sarah, and other "reliable sources." The book claims that Diana suffered from bulimia and manic depression leading her to attempt suicide (by swallowing a whole bottle of paracetamol) on several occasions in the mid-'80s. The villain in the story is her husband, the Prince of Wales, who neglected her, never really loved her, cared more about saving the rain forest than saving his marriage, and possibly was messing around with an old flame, Lady Camilla Parker-Bowles.

Is Princess Di real news?

Shock horror. The book is serialized in the formerly-serious Rupert Murdoch rag, The Sunday Times, with yelping headlines about Diana's fear of getting fat, Charles' coldness and the imminent crash of the "fairy-tale" marriage that started fashions for windswept fair hair and huge-ruffled dresses. The tabloids picked up the technicolor factoids and declared the whole thing a "constitutional crisis." The qualities (with the exception of The Independent which disdains "non-stories" about royals) reported on the reporting. Like the tabloids, they had half-page color photos of the princess' thin face with her denim-blue eyes and unfocused smile. The radio call-in shows were full of soulsearching over the state of the royal family. Historians and politics dons from Oxford and Cambridge were interviewed over the constitutional implications of the story. Buckingham Palace, as usual, refused any comment on the story except to say that, despite author Andrew Morton's hints and Sunday Times editor Andrew Neil's flat statement, there was no cooperation from the princess.

This is actually the heart of the matter. If Diana had allowed certain things to be known—like her mental difficulties, her bulimia and her suicide attempts—it could be that she's softening up the public for (yet another) royal divorce. Morton and Neil insist that she knew what people like her former flatmate Carolyn Bartholemew and sister Sarah MacCorquodale had said on the record. But in the book, the attributed quotations from such insiders are all as bland as vanilla pudding. The hot stuff is completely unsubstantiated. If Morton is right that Diana is basket-case and Charles a cold navel gazer, he should back up his charges—it would still be a trashy (though incredibly entertaining) story, but it would give the British something to think about in terms of the function of royalty at the turn of the 21st century. If it isn't true, then the Royal Family should sue the smirk off the Sunday Times and Andrew Morton.

But they won't. The palace doesn't comment and the palace doesn't sue. So we may never know the truth of the matter.

The real story may be not the internal workings of the Waleses' marriage (which, despite comparisons with the abdication crisis of 1936, is not really a constitutional matter) but the behavior of the press. The kind of public disgust this whole thing has elicited is reminiscent of Americans' attitude toward the way Bill Clinton's alleged peccadilloes were handled. Or the way Arthur Ashe was forced by the ever-stupid USA Today to martyr himself for television cameras. Or the hounding of the woman in the William Kennedy Smith trial. Real stories—like the Rio summit, the shaky state of the Maastricht treaty, the slaughter in Croatia—are being shoved onto inside pages as the press debates its own excesses.

Many newspaper editors are arguing that if the Princess of Wales was not a mental case in a wrecked marriage before, after all this she will be. But that again, is not the real point. The worry is that if the press doesn't regulate itself, the public will call for strict guidelines on what reporters can and cannot do. Outrage over the treatment of the much-beloved Windsors could imperil the free press—some in Parliament are already calling for legislation to muzzle reporters. Big stories are worth fighting for, telling the truth about a national crisis—Watergate or the covered-up massacre at Gibraltar of unarmed IRA members—but sad stuff about an upperclass marriage on the skids is not.

Gay/Lesbian films bring protestors but show goes on

BY MARTIN ALLEN

STAFF WRITER

The Leon County Library was the scene of yet another round of protest Monday evening over the controversial screenings of films and video productions scheduled as part of the 1992 Tallahassee Lesbian/Gay Film Festival.

A crowd of approximately 400 people appeared evenly split over whether the films should be shown. Sheriff's deputies and half a dozen self-described "peace-keepers" from the American Civil Liberties Union were also on hand.

"Actually, it's been real peaceful," said Ben Starrett, of the local ACLU, in front of the library's south entrance Monday night. "Just a lot of people exercising their First Amendment rights peacefully."

Lorie Fridell, who chairs the Tallahassee ACLU chapter agreed. Fridell addressed not only the First Amendment issues surrounding the night's screenings, but the greater issues of accepting gay and lesbians rights in the workplace and society.

"We're not only here today in support of the First Amendment, which is being represented fully here, but also the equal protection of the laws and equal liberties for gays and lesbians in terms of employment and the ability to adopt and so forth," she said.

Across the street from the Library, near the gazebo, several dozen of the anti-festival protesters gathered. They could be seen in small prayer groups, as well as in larger conglomerations with signs and placards condemning the film and video presentations.

Flora McConkie was among them. She said the libraries should be "safe" for families. By that she meant safe "from a mental and spiritual standpoint," she said.

"We are thrilled with the number of families that have come out tonight," said McConkie, who spoke against the festival at the June 9 library advisory board meeting.

"The public library ought to be a place where families feel safe and comfortable coming at any time, knowing that nothing will be going on that might be objectionable," she added.

Many of the anti-festival protesters later circled the building and joined their fellow marchers at the front of the building where American Family Association board member Randy Brien was leading his portion of the demonstration, armed with a bullhorn.

"We are here to protest the County Commission's decision to let this film festival go on," he said. "We are not here to confront or condemn any group. We are here to protest using our library for a film festival of questionable nature."

While Brien was speaking to a reporter, the opposing groups began actively trying to out shout each other on the library steps, but the storm seemed to pass almost as quickly as it had begun, and the crowds began to dissipate.

Among the last to leave were a group of people from the United Church, site of the first two nights of the film festival. Many of them carried signs reading "Christians do support gay and lesbian rights."

"We are open and affirming on sexual orientation," said Roger Turner, who chairs the worship committee at United Church, site of the previous two nights of the film festival.

"I don't think (they are) consistent with Jesus' teachings of unconditional love. Accept people for what they are."

Charities get extra helping

BY BRIAN SCOTT
FLAMBEAU WRITER

The needy can now sample food from restaurants all over Tallahassee, thanks to a new program designed to bring them chow for free.

The Second Helping program, a branch of the Food Bank of Tallahassee, began operating last Wednesday. Volunteers picked up a dinner of potatoes, onions, beans and cherries from the New Leaf Market and delivered it to the Salvation Army Men's Lodge for dinner.

The Food Bank of Tallahassee has provided bulk quantities of food at low prices to charities for seven years. But the Second Helping program is a little different.

With Second Helping, restaurants may call the Food Bank and leave a message saying they have food to be picked up. The next morning, a freezer truck picks up the food and delivers it to the charity organization for free.

Woody Rogers, the Manager of Second Helping, is glad it's underway.

"We are contributing to the charitable need in Leon County of the poor and needy receiving 2,500 meals a day," he said.

Restaurants willing to donate to the Second Helping program are lining up, Rogers said. Already he has commitments from Food Glorious Food, Blimpie's, The Silver Slipper, Burger King and Kentucky Fried Chicken. The New Leaf Market was the first area restaurant to donate food to the new program.

Carol Wilkinson of the New Leaf Market says that she plans on donating to Second Helping on a regular basis.

"If we feel it is worth their while to come out here and pick up what we have, we will definitely be doing this," she said.

The Tallahassee branch of Second Helping is part of the larger Prepared Perishable Food Program, operating similar organizations in over 80 cities nationwide. Second Helping is being funded by the City of Tallahassee, Leon County, the United Way and multiple private donors.

Charity organizations are excited about the new service.

"Everything went very well," said Dominick Grillo of the Salvation Army Men's Lodge. "Whatever I can get is a big help to me here."

There are many other charity organizations in Tallahassee slated to receive aid from Second Helping. The Cold Night Shelter, Haven of Rest, Lighthouse Children's Home, Good News Ministries, the Children's Treehouse Program and others are all expected to receive food from local restaurants.

We throw away enough bottles and jars to fill the 1,350-foot twin towers of New York's World Trade Center every two weeks.

Lick said the House budget plan is a 'positive step forward' that would 'at least stop the bleeding and start the healing process.'

Budget

Florida State University Dale Lick said a plan like the one the House passed is "a positive step forward," which will allow the university system to take in about 5,000 more students.

"This at least would stop the bleeding and start the healing process," Lick said Wednesday.

Florida A&M University President Frederick Humphries was out of town Wednesday and could not be reached for comment.

Grim scenarios

Now that there will probably be an approximately $400 million revenue increase, the question turns to whether the Legislature will override the budget veto Gov. Lawton Chiles has promised.

Without a budget at the end of June, the government would shut down July 1, except for the most essential workers. And in all likelihood, the universities will not be considered essential, according to Riordan.

"It's hard to argue that teaching a class in any discipline is a life-and-death matter," Riordan said.

On the other hand, if the Legislature does override the governor's veto, the state university system will probably end up with somewhere between $20 and $40 million more than this year. But over the last two years, budget cuts have taken a $164 million hunk out of the system.

Riordan said such a measure would mean things don't get any worse, except that faculty members will likely end up going a third

Fee delay should pass

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The one-year delay in the implementation of the controversial athletic fee increase at Florida State University mandated by FSU President Dale Lick in May, goes before the Board of Regents for approval Friday.

In a telephone conference call, the executive committee of the BOR, which consists of about half the regents, will vote on whether to authorize the delay in increasing the athletic fee from $1.15 to $3.35 per credit hour.

"The fact that it's been scheduled for the executive meeting tells you it's not controversial," BOR spokesperson Pat Riordan said Tuesday.

The BOR voted to approve the increase at their Feb. 7 meeting, despite protests from the Committee to Defeat the Athletic Fee Increase. But Lick decided last month to delay putting the fee hike into effect until fall 1993, blaming construction delays in adding seats to Doak Campbell Stadium.

straight year without a pay raise. He added that public school teachers and community college faculty have received their raises as scheduled.

"If the Legislature doesn't recognize that unfairness, they're going to lose a lot of good people," he said.

Besides funding growth, the money could be used to help university libraries get some new materials and pay for some repairs.

But that's about it, Riordan said.

"Twenty to 40 million dollars is like a nickel in the Grand Canyon," he said.

Florida House of Representatives. Woodall agreed that women will make a different kind of politician.

"Women will bring a new perspective and a different way of doing things," Woodall said. "They're not going to be part of the good ole boy network. It needs to be challenged and women candidates are more likely to do that."

Woodall also said women in politics generally have agendas different from those of traditional politicians.

"Women have a different set of priorities, with emphasis on things that support families and children and education," Woodall said.

Education Commissioner Betty Castor agreed that women's strong positions on domestic issues will help them in the coming elections.

"The country seems to be looking for people who can answer the issues of education, who can address social issues, address issues that affect women, families and children," Castor said. "I expect that we're going to elect a number of women to Congress in Florida."

'This is a year when people in general, women and men, are very committed to change. We're going to see positive outcomes for women all over the country.'

Castor said she remembers 20 years ago when she was the first female Hillsborough County Commissioner. Later she became the first woman in the Florida Senate. She says she is pleased to see the advances women have made in politics.

"Now there are just a lot more women who are winning their races," Castor said. "It's a pretty exciting time."

Uphill battle

Despite advances, women still are fighting an uphill battle. Of 100 U.S. senators, only two are women.

"To have only 2 percent of the senate representing 52 percent of the population is just crazy," Yeakel said.

Raising money is one of the biggest problems female candidates face, Yeakel and Woodall agreed. Yeakel expects Specter to spend over $2 for every $1 of hers.

Another problem, according to Woodall, is the lurking belief that to be a politician, one must play political hardball.

"People question if women can handle the political process, if they can handle the pressure and the heat," Woodall said. "That's all linked to people's concept of how things have to be done."

Woodall said what people are really asking is: "Are you going to operate the way the men do?"

"We have our work cut out for us," Yeakel said.

Sample the "Crudites" served at 621 Gallery

BY KATI KAIRIES

ARTS EDITOR

Webster's New World Dictionary defines "crudites" (pronounced kroo-duh-tays, not kroo-dites) as "raw vegetables cut up and served as hors d'oeuvres, usually with a dip." It's a pretty apt definition of the art show of the same name opening at the 621 Gallery in Railroad Square Friday night.

The show will feature new works by Martha Graham, Mark Hinson, Jerome Stern and Alex Weiss, all local talents who have banded together to present this tasty exhibit for this weekend only.

In the group's press release, Graham describes herself as "an over-educated waitress who spends her spare time perusing flea markets, reading novels, and figuring out what to do when she grows up." Graham is the only one of the four to have exhibited before, at the Florida State Gallery and Museum, and has used her talent to adorn everything from t-shirts to baseball caps.

Hinson is a staff writer and songwriter artist for the Tallahassee Democrat who also served time as arts writer and cartoonist for the Flambeau. He is known mostly for his bristling, darkly witty pen-and-ink drawings, but will be branching out into color for this show.

"Almost all of what I'll be showing is in color," Hinson said Wednesday. "This is a large poster-size 'screaming head.' I wore out a lot of black pens before somebody gave me some oil crayons, and I started to use color."

Hinson, who says the inspiration for most of his artwork comes very late at night when nothing is on TV, cites Gerald Scarth, Francis Bacon and RAW Comics as influence.

Jerome Stern's pen-and-ink animals grace 621 Gallery's latest show.

Stern is better known to legions of students as a pop culture guru and head of FSU's writing program. He also performs commentary for National Public Radio and recently published the book Making Shapels Fiction. Stern's whimsical pen-and-ink drawings illustrate the Democrat's weekly Barmadillo column.

"I am the animals I draw," he says in the group's press release. "I think that would sound better if I could say it in French."

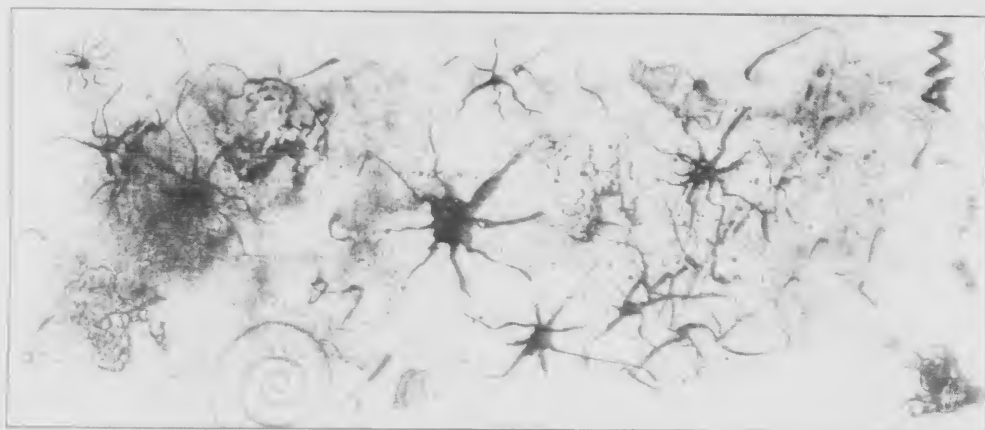

Weiss is a notorious in local music circles as a concert promoter and ex-band manager (Casual T's, Singing Spoons) who said Wednesday that he has been making art since he was a kid. He will be showing his lithographs and paintings for the first time in this show. Weiss cites former local artist Linda Hall as a major influence on his work.

If it sounds like a mixed bag of art, maybe the artists' manifesto will provide some enlightenment: "Crudites expresses the raw but appetizing course we have taken, liberating art from the haute cuisine of radical formalism."

Ah, what the heck. Who needs enlightenment anyway?

Crudites, featuring the works of Martha Graham, Mark Hinson, Jerome Stern and Alex Weiss, opens Friday night at the 621 Gallery in Railroad Square. The opening reception is free for all, and runs from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Musical artistry will be provided by the lovely and talented Jer Kermee. The show runs through Sunday, and regular gallery hours are 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

It'll be just like the old days when DVC takes the stage to thrash and burn at Club 506 Friday night.

DVC makes Club 506 their homecoming pulpit

BY MICK BUCHANAN
SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

Friday marks the triumphant hometown return of Tallahassee's speed metal kings and international pin-up boys Darth Vader's Church (DVC). They will celebrate their homecoming by thrashing the Club 506 crowd to within an inch of its life.

DVC left these shores in April to tour Germany and Austria for three weeks. While there, they opened for the English band Paradise Lost, and also played with Morgoth (Germany), Crusher (France), and Master Arizona.

The guys in DVC (Parker Knapp on guitars, keyboards and vocals, Glenn Lawhon on guitars, keyboards and vocals, Alain Rodgers on bass, and Todd Thompson on drums) have been together since 1988. Their recent experience in Europe opened their eyes to the World Beat phenomenon.

"We went to Europe not really expecting much and were overwhelmed with the reception we got," Thompson said this week. "We met a lot of good people and did a lot of good shows. We played one show to 1,200 people, which was our biggest crowd."

The band was provided with their own tour bus equipped with all the amenities (i.e., food and beer) and was also paid a per diem salary. Despite the temptations inherent in such a touring set-up, the band didn't indulge in too many wild antics, although there was at least one notable exception.

"One night, the whole band was drunk and the people at the place we were staying had cooked a whole pig for us," Thompson said. "They had cut the head off the pig before cooking it, and still had the head sitting on a table. While the video camera was running, I jumped up and ran over and chewed the nose off it!"

DVC will be changing their set for Friday night's performance. Where previously they had played the tradition two 45-minute sets, this show will feature one two-hour show with a 10-minute break in there somewhere.

"We'll be doing lots of old songs for this gig, but still all originals," Thompson said. "We've fooled around with a few Sabbath and Skynyrd songs in practice, and even played Nirvana's 'Smells Like Teen Spirit' this week, but haven't ever found any covers we wanted to play live."

DVC comes home to play really loud, really fast music Friday night at Club 506. Magic Juan opens. It's an 18-plus show, doors open at 10, and admission is $4.

Requiem for a heavyweight: Bill Gaines' mad Mad world

By E. GORDON LAMONT

Bill Gaines, the creator of the Mad magazine, died last week at the age of 82. He was a man of many talents, a writer, a publisher, a man of letters, a man of the world. He was a man who had a sense of humor, a sense of adventure, a sense of the absurd. He was a man who had a sense of the world, a sense of the people, a sense of the things that were going on in the world. He was a man who had a sense of the world, a sense of the people, a sense of the things that were going on in the world. He was a man who had a sense of the world, a sense of the people, a sense of the things that were going on in the world.

This Vault yields a homicidal gem, a gentle grin and lots of phlegm

BY C. ADOLPH MOORES

(Hey, that's enough fun for one afternoon, I'm putting the Buddy Holly albums away. Time for

Truly, Madly, Deeply (1991)—Far superior to that other bit of supernatural love syrup, Ghost, this quaint little charmer from England stars Juliet Stevenson as a linguist who has recently lost her lover (Alan Rickman). She becomes so bereaved by his death that he returns to a mortal state in order to show her how to live again. Wonderfully acted film (Stevenson is exceptional) works as a love story, a comedy and a generally uplifting story of the human spirit. One of the best romantic films to appear in quite some time.

Highlander 2: The Awakening (1990)—Follow-up to the enjoyable "B" sleeper was a smash on the international market before even being released here in the states. There was a damn good reason. This putrid piece of overblown phlegm defies the original's logic and becomes a convenient excuse for gimmicky special effects and elongated action sequences. Christopher Lambert could be the worst actor of our time. At least in the first film his lines were kept to a minimum. Here, he must carry the character, which results in one damn laughable performance. Sean Connery joins in on the ballyhoo (didn't he get his miserable head chopped off?) as some benevolent spirit. Silly and insulting sequel.

Homicide (1991)—Harkening back to his screenplay of 1982's The Verdict, writer/director David Mamet once again deals with the moral conflict of a good man whose sense of decency and spirituality have become misguided due to his corrupt environment. Joe Mantegna plays an NYPD homicide detective who mistakenly becomes involved in the murder of a Jewish shop owner. Being a "reformed" Jew himself, he soon discovers that he has lost his faith and identity. This leaves him with a choice to perform his duties as an officer of the law or to rediscover himself as an individual. Mamet's typically gritty style is here, both visually and verbally. The characters, extremely well drawn, are always multi-dimensional and real. Students of film, especially screenwriters, should take notice. This is how a taut crime thriller should be written.

Into The Sun (1991)—Ridiculous action flick blends the premises of The Hard Way with Top Gun. Yea, that's right, The Hard Way and Top Gun. How incredibly moronic and brain-destroying can a single idea be? Michael Pare plays a fighter pilot who must show actor Michael Anthony Hall the tricks of military air maneuvers. Yaaagh!! We are all so horribly doomed.

Father Of The Bride (1991) Remake of the 1950 Spencer Tracy Liz Taylor-Fortensky (Man, I love saying that—Taylor-Fortensky!) classic has nowhere near the charm of the original but works as a decent modernization of the tale. Steve Martin plays the neurotic dad of a 22 year old woman (child, in his eyes) who must deal with surrendering his little girl to adulthood. Martin's characterization is often hilarious with most of the chuckles stemming from his overly possessive nature and paranoia. He definitely carries the film, but a well-rounded cast, including the always delightful Diane Keaton and the always annoying (at least on the big screen) Martin Short, provide the fare with necessary class. Enjoyable but by no means mandatory viewing.

Social climbers

The ever-popular Casual T's clamber into the Grand Finale Friday night for an evening of musical mayhem and family fun. You never know what to expect from a T's show at Finale's. Will Pat bring his bowling ball? Will Dave wear a dress? Will Bobby spill a beer? Will Mark strip naked and run amok? Show up around 10 to find out. It'll only cost a couple of bucks.

Hot Tuna plays cool blues

BY MICK BUCHANAN
SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

If you're too young to remember the original Jefferson Airplane, you can experience the main songwriting team from the band Sunday night at the Moon, when Hot Tuna makes a rare all-acoustic appearance.

Hot Tuna specializes in authentic, original American Delta blues (not to be confused, of course, with the Nile Delta blues), delivered in its originally intended format. Expect to hear moaning, impassioned vocals and stinging bottleneck guitar, all delivered in the inimitable Hot Tuna style.

Hot Tuna's lineup includes Jorma Kaukonen on lead guitar and vocals, Jack Casady on bass, and, for Sunday's show, guitarist Michael Falzarano. Kaukonen and Casady were founding members of Jefferson Airplane and have been playing together since their Washington, D.C. high school days. Falzarano has been with Hot Tuna for a decade and is an original member of the seminal New York City roots rock band the Memphis Pilgrims.

Hot Tuna began as an offshoot of the Jefferson Airplane, and was intended to give Kaukonen and Casady an outlet for their more acoustic-oriented blues music, which was miles removed from the manic, psycho-electric hard rock of the Airplane.

The band served as a vehicle for the more traditional songs Kaukonen had been raised on, such as "Death Don't Have No Mercy" by the Rev. Gary Davis, "Police Dog Blues" by Blind Blake, and other country blues songs.

Since Hot Tuna's first recording in 1970, Kaukonen and Casady have recorded 25 albums between the two bands. The latest Hot Tuna release is called Pair A Dice Found, available on Epic Records.

Hot Tuna plays acoustic blues Sunday night at the Moon. Doors open at 8 p.m. with one show only beginning at 9. This 18-plus event is sponsored by Student Campus Entertainment, and is free to all Florida State students with validated IDs. General admission tickets are $6 in advance, $7 the day of the show.

CALENDAR

LITERATURE INVADES THE AIR-waves each Monday on V-89 when the Oh-So-Popular Banana Eskimo highlights local writers from 9 to 10 p.m. The readings are hosted by Phil Ballman and organized by Mary Jane Ryals, and they're always looking for a few (or a lot of) good writers. They say they want all good voices to read on the show. Aspiring penpersons can call 644-1837 for more information, or just listen each Monday for details. In upcoming weeks you'll hear:

June 22—Kati Kairies and Lee Rohe read poetry

June 29—Holly Masturzo reads a memoir, Lu Vickers reads fiction, and Greg Byrd reads poetry

July 6—Phil Cacace, Thom Chesney and Matt Millar offer two sets of performance, poetry and prose

July 13—Ron Depeter and Bill Gary read fiction

July 20—Stacie M. Kiner and Lenny Della Rocca read poetry

July 27—Robb Fink and Tom O'Donnell read fiction, Monifa Love reads poetry.

IT'S TIME NOW TO PLOW THE FERTILE fields of local culture. Hitch up the mules and hang on tight! Because of space limitations, we're only gonna hit the high points. Tonight at Bimini's, Missipy James and the Blue Monday Guys play nothin' but the blues. John Blue tunes up the crowd during Friday's Happy Hour, after which Bogazedi does some swamp stompin'. Saturday night, Canal Street gives fun the green light. Call 575-4183 for details. Carlos and Friends get busy during Friday's Happy Hour at the Mill Bakery and Eatery on the Parkway, while Slapstick knocks it around Friday and Saturday nights. It's 18-plus and there's a $2 cover. Call 877-4848 for information. At the Grand Finale tonight, the Screaming Iguanas of Love from downstate will do their scaly best to make you wriggle. Sure, there's a cover charge but it won't break the bank. Friday night, the Casual T's pitch a hell of a hoedown for only $2 a pop, and Saturday night the Shankleys (and special guests Roosevelt from Athens, Ga.) shake a leg or two. Call 599-9358 for details. Club 506 is the site of metal mayhem when DVC and Magic Juan assault the sound barrier and leave it tattered and bleeding from every orifice. It's an all-ages show and costs $5 for those under 18 and $4 for those older than that. Doors open at 10. And the roundup just wouldn't be complete without telling you that the mighty Pearl hosts Little Rock Friday and Saturday nights.

Nocturnal golfers take aim at cash

BY MARK NESSMITH
SPORTS EDITOR

Local golfers are flocking to the Seminole Golf course, host of Tallahassee's only night-time golf action, to fine-tune their swing on the driving range when the sun goes down.

Well, some come to practice.

Tuesday night, most of the thirty or so golfers said they brave the muggy, summer nights hoping only to break the "Bud Light" and take home the $2,040 cash prize. The prize money increases by $10 every night, unless, of course, someone makes that perfect swing.

"It's packed out there by the target," said Brett Maugh, who picks up the range balls with a tractor each night. "Right about that distance too."

The target, a silver light bulb set in a large white box, sits 140 yards out in the center of the range.

The truth is, a crazed loner, perched in a grassy knoll and clutching a high-powered rifle, could be the only living person with a strong chance of breaking the light.

Unfortunately for "golfer" David

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1992

Jean Dixon's

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE
NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Build a new partnership for the long haul.
Your resources and assets begin to grow in September. Forging permanent alliances is a top priority in late fall. Holiday travel in December will add to your festive mood. Early 1993 brings a boost in income and new career opportunities. A psychic experience next spring could finalize an important project. A heart-to-heart talk with a partner can put old hurts to rest.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS
DATE: film critic Roger Ebert, actresses Carol Kane and Isabella Rossellini, rockstar Paul McCartney.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your receptivity to new ideas and natural inquisitiveness helps you uncover a new route to prosperity. Convey your desires to interested parties; their response will delight you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Those who expect the worst often fall victim to it. Think positive! You must be sure of yourself before holding others to account. A loved one's conduct at social affairs could cause tension.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A dream could come true today. A special person or event makes it happen. Use your financial insight carefully and you will boost your earning power. Bury the hat with an estranged relative.

CANCER (June 21-July 21): You are in control today and intuitively sure of the right thing to do. Working behind the scenes proves highly profitable. In social gatherings, clown around and tell a few jokes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Inside information may fall into your hands.

today. You are able to advance or new; follow up! A private talk with an influential person could boost your career or finances. You will shine in meetings of a serious nature.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Any difficulties you encounter early in the day could be as costly as they are worrisome.
Avoid acting on impulse or burning a hole in your bankbook. A telephone call increases your options.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you trigger a dramatic change in your feel an urge to attempt something goals and lifestyle.
Romance will intensify in May.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An ideal day to get out of the house and cultivate new friendships. Joining a special group or club is recommended. An older person's wise advice gets you out of a jam.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21):
Joint financial arrangements require some discussion before they can be firmed up. Diligent research will yield vital information. Set priorities before revising a budget.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A loved one's declaration sends your spirits soaring. A career or business decision needs to be made without further delay.
Consult experts to answer any nagging doubts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18):
Stubborn resistance to progress could boomerang, isolating others to issue an ultimatum. Do not allow your romantic dreams to become an obsession.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Refuse to allow outside distractions to interfere with the normal rhythm of your week.
Reconnect with people who have been out of touch. A platonic relationship could turn romantic.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are bright, curious and eager to be popular. A strong desire to be accepted makes these youngsters particularly vulnerable to peer pressure.
They need firm parental guidance to steer a steady course. Although shortcuts appeal to these Gemini, they should be avoided in the classroom. Doing a superficial job on homework or research assignments could become a bad habit.
Praise these children when they take the time to do a job really well.

Windham, course rules say you must use a golf club.

"I'm out here cuttin' up trying to hit the sign. That's the only reason I come," said Windham, a local copier repairman.

John Wilkey agreed with Windham.

"(The jackpot) is the only reason I come out here," Wilkey said. "I only use a couple clubs. For me, the five iron's just about there but I'm not a big hitter."

Wilkey said he prefers hitting range balls after dark because the other golfers seem a bit less laid back during the day. Also, the cash jackpot can only be won at night.

"The folks that come out during the day, they're like serious about the game and they want it to be quiet," he said.

Charles Waldon, an assistant golf coach at Rickards High School, spent the evening hitting balls with his sons Charles, 8, and Wesley, 6.

"Me and my boys are aiming for the light!" Waldon said. "We've got the two-year old and his momma in the car waiting for us to bring the $2,000 home. I'm in hot water now (because) I didn't win the jackpot tonight."

Ron Baxley, who works nights at the range as a volunteer, said they've never had any problem determining which golfer to award the jackpot to.

"It's kind of on the honor system," said Baxley, who noted that the current prize is the highest ever. "We try to watch it as much as we can. But usually the one who hits it will freak out and nobody else will contest it."

Even with the lure of big money, not everyone at the range came out shooting for the light.

"I came out to improve my driving game. Two grand wasn't too much into it," said Jack Musgrove.

The Seminole Golf Course & Club's lighted range is open until 10 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and until midnight on Fridays and Saturdays.

SPORTS BRIEFS

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Philadelphia 76ers basketball star Charles Barkley, who broke the nose of a man who taunted him in a bar, was found innocent Wednesday afternoon of battery and disorderly conduct charges.

A 12 member Milwaukee County Circuit jury acquitted Barkley after brief deliberations. The jury received the case at 10:30 a.m. and announced the verdict about 1 p.m.

Barkley was charged for breaking the nose of James McCarthy, 26, on Dec. 22 during an altercation at a Milwaukee bar after the 76ers lost to the Bucks. Barkley said he hit McCarthy in self-defense.

pansion Draft begins at 6 p.m. tonight on the Sunshine Network cable 23.

Tryouts for the Atlanta Braves will be held Saturday at the Florida A&M baseball field from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Baseball players 16-22 years old are invited to attend. Call (404) 768-7592 for more information.

Lightning may look east in first draft

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

In a hockey city with a touch of Europe, NHL teams will likely show their taste for European talent in the NHL entry draft Saturday.

When the NHL's 24 teams make their selections in the Montreal Forum, starting at noon EDT, it's expected as many as half the first-round picks will be from overseas.

A sub-par North American group of juniors, and greater accessibility to Eastern European talent, have shifted the traditional order, where European picks were considered too risky for a first-round choice.

The expansion Tampa Bay Lightning, choosing first, are guaranteed to get the player they want. Unfortunately, they'd rather have the first pick next year when the draft crop is expected to be bountiful.

Tampa boss Phil Esposito said recently his short list consisted of five players: left winger Todd Warriner (Windsor, Ontario Hockey League), center Brandon Convery (Sudbury, OHL), and defenseman Mike Rathje (Medicine Hat, Western Hockey League), Darius Kasparaitis (Russia), and Roman Hamrlík (Czechoslovakia).

Of the five, the most likely choice is Hamrlík, a 6-2, 190-pound defenseman who is one of the few players able to step right into the NHL next season. Unfortunately, the selecting team will have to deal with Hamrlík's existing contract with ZPS Zlin. Based on the precedent involving 1989 pick Mats Sundin of Quebec, the only European to be drafted first overall, the cost of Hamrlík could approach $500,000.

The expansion Ottawa Senators choose next, followed by San Jose, Quebec and Toronto. After the rest of the non-playoff teams choose, the playoff teams select in reverse order of the regular season finish.

Homeless women face a trying life of penury on the street

BY CLARISSA WEST
STAFF WRITER

Janet Jones isn't what most people think of when they think of the homeless.

She's 26 years old, has a high school diploma, and training in medical assistance and computers.

But last Wednesday, Jones was among more than a dozen women at the Tallahassee Cold Nights Shelter. She and her four children had just gotten off a bus from Fort Myers, where they left behind Jones' abusive spouse.

"I couldn't go anywhere, work or anywhere, without him coming and harassing me," said Jones, whose real name is being withheld.

Although their particular circumstances may vary, Jones is part of a growing population of homeless women. The latest survey conducted by the Tallahassee Coalition for the Homeless counted as many as 40 single women living on Tallahassee's streets—almost double what it was the year before.

Dozens of other homeless women were counted as part of couples and families. And since coalition officials point out their survey is only a "snapshot" of local homelessness, the actual numbers could be three to four times higher.

Jones said she came to the capital because she figured the employment opportunities and the chances of finding decent, affordable housing would be better. And because of her background, she may not be on the street long.

"She has a lot of skills and it

Budget battles threaten emergency family aid

BY RON MATUS
STAFF WRITER

As prospects dim for Gov. Lawton Chiles' Fair Share budget proposal, so do chances that money will be restored to a butchered state program that has kept thousands of Florida families from being thrown out on the streets.

"We're still trying to get the Senate to put the money back in, but at this point we don't know," Rosemary Gallagher, a lobbyist for the Florida Catholic Conference, said Friday.

The program, which has been administered by the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services since 1987, offers emergency assistance checks of up to $400—on a one-time basis only—to families faced with eviction.

Chiles' budget, which calls for raising more than $1.35 billion in new taxes, would restore half of the $4.8 million that was cut from the program last year. The rest would be made up with federal matching funds.

But the Legislature is nowhere near passing the kind of budget Chiles wants. And compromise proposals being tossed around in the Senate and the House don't even mention the program.

shouldn't be too long before she finds something. Unlike many of the others, she's not a chronic homeless victim," said Mel Eby, the shelter's director. "Another thing in her favor is that she has children and this community is usually generous when kids become involved."

But other women have found it's not so easy.

About 15 women gather at the shelter every night. They're all from different walks of life with different outlooks on life. But one thing they all have in common is a belief that no one should think this couldn't happen to them.

Women who come to the shelter are placed in the back of the room, where sheets hung over lines make a barrier to give them privacy. They have one bathroom and one TV set, and "beds" instead of the cots men have. There is also a place to take a shower and do laundry.

"You never know about tomorrow, no matter what status in life you have," said Amy Appleton, who is in her 50s.

Appleton said she's been homeless in Tallahassee since 1983. Like Jones, she's a high

There are many reasons why these women are on the streets. Some are the victims of a bad economy. Some of bad family relations. And many may get back on their feet.

But some of these women are what Eby called "chronic" homeless.

"People feel that all homeless are rehabilitative. This is just false hope," he said, adding that 35 percent of the homeless are clinically diagnosed as being mentally ill, 35 percent suffer from personality disorders and clinical

FSU student seeks local office

BY JAY SCHROER
ASST. NEWS EDITOR

A Florida State University graduate student announced Friday he is running for superintendent of Leon County schools, marking the first entry by an area university student in the upcoming fall elections.

"I thought this was an opportunity to use my skills and talents," Bernard Traphan said Sunday. "I hope this will be the impetus to get other students to enter into local government races."

The 25-year-old Traphan said he chose to run for school superintendent because of his background in computers and business, and added, "I thought the current superintendent was doing a poor job, especially in the minority community."

Traphan and at least two other challengers will face Democratic incumbent Bill Woolley, who oversees Leon County public schools for kindergarten through high school

Traphan's foray into county politics follows several experiences with student government at FSU. In 1990 he was appointed to a student senate seat and also served on the board of directors for Graduate Students United. More recently, he was co-campaign manager for Jeanne Behn in her successful bid for FSU student body president last semester.

About a quarter of Leon County's 198,000 population are students, with over 48,000 enrolled at FSU, Florida A&M University, or Tallahassee Community College, according to the Tallahassee Leon County Planning department.

Traphan said he plans to run a people-oriented

Man stabbed with bottle

A Tallahassee man was stabbed in the chest with a broken beer bottle early Saturday morning by a jealous woman, Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Annette Garrett said Saturday.

The victim told officers that he and a female friend were at his home talking. The friend got angry and accused him of "flirting" with other women at the Peak Lounge earlier.

During the heated argument, the woman took a broken bottle from her car and stabbed him once in the chest.

The victim was driven by a friend to Tallahassee Memorial Regional Medical Center, where he was treated for a 4 1/2 inch wound. He has been released.

Garrett said no arrest has been made in the case.

The Beef People were robbed

A man with a colorful hat walked into the Winn Dixie on East Tennessee Street early Sunday morning and robbed the store, Garrett said Sunday.

The man walked into the grocery store, 1964 E. Tennessee St., and forced the manager and a cashier to open the store's safe. The suspect took the money and fled the store. Turtleneck bandit robs BK

A burger joint was robbed Saturday morning by a man who disguised himself by pulling his turtleneck shirt up over his head, Garrett said.

Two employees had just arrived at the Burger King, 1060 W. Tennessee St. at about 5:04 a.m. when a man walked up to them at the back door. The man pulled out a gun, forced them inside the building and demanded money.

The robber locked the two employees in the freezer and then got away in a car driven by another man.

Employees arrived later and released the men from the freezer. Neither of the victims were injured in the robbery.

Three-county car chase

A drunk driver fleeing patrol cars from three different law enforcement agencies early Sunday morning tried to ram a TPD patrol car, Garrett said.

Sheriff deputies from DeKalb County, Ga., Gadsden and Leon counties chased two men in a Chevrolet van into Tallahassee at 3:57 a.m. Saturday.

An officer was on South Monroe Street when he was alerted to the pursuit headed his way. When the van approached, it veered toward the patrol car, trying to collide with the officer. The officer ran off the road and hit a telephone pole, trying to avoid the van.

The pursuit ended at Capital Circle where the men were arrested. TPD charged the driver, Gerald Silva, 26, of Bainbridge, Ga., with aggravated assault on a police officer, driving under the influence of alcohol, reckless driving and other traffic violations.

The passenger, Martinez Polo, 27, also of Bainbridge, faces charges from the other law enforcement agencies. They are being held at the Leon County Jail without bond.

TCC burglary

An officer arriving at Tallahassee Community College to investigate a burglary alarm early Saturday morning spotted the suspect recklessly speeding across campus, Garrett said.

James Earl Faulkner, 25, tried to flee the scene in a stolen car but the car became stuck in an excavated area on campus.

Faulkner then fled on foot, abandoning the television and VCR he had stolen from the college. Faulkner was found and arrested. He was charged with burglary and grand theft. He was taken to jail and has not yet been issued bond.

Gays, lesbians come out at rally

BY SUE MULLINS
STAFF WRITER

On the steps of the old Capitol many of Tallahassee's homo-sexual residents took advantage of an open microphone Saturday to publicly declare their sexual preferences.

In a rally to encourage public awareness and wrap up the local portion of the National Lesbian and Gay Pride Week, about 75 residents revealed either their name, place of employment, or both.

The collective "coming out" was an effort to make the city's gay population more visible, according to activist Joan Denman, who helped publicize the week's events that culminated in the rally and a march to City Hall.

"It is very empowering when you can be public about your lifestyle and just be yourself," said Denman, who owns Rubyfruit Books, a local bookstore that offers gay and lesbian literature.

"When you don't have to hide, and you can let the rest of the population see how many of us there are, that's what Lesbian and Gay Pride Week is all about," she added.

Rally participants met at the capitol and then marched to City Hall to show their displeasure at city officials for not officially recognizing Pride Week. Marchers then made their way to Myers Park for a picnic.

The rally took on somber as well as celebratory tones as participants described their struggles and anger over society's general non-acceptance of gays and lesbians. One local teenager spoke movingly about the suicide of her friend, who realized she was gay but went unaccepted by her family.

Denman and an organizer of the controversial Lesbian and Gay Film Festival, Dana Farmer, said they felt that at least 90 percent of the passing motorists responded positively to the group's gathering.

Farmer said only two people were rude to rally participants the whole day.

"We've been so socialized to be quiet about our lives, we're really surprised when we come out and people do support us," Denman said. "I think all the uproar over the film festival at the (Leon County public) library brought that point home because a lot of the people who came out to support us are just folks in the community who support basic human rights."

The area gay and lesbian population, which is conservatively estimated to be approximately 15,000 people, is easily overlooked, according to Denman. The huge number of state workers who can't come out for fear of losing their jobs makes that impossible, she said.

One man, who wore a paper bag over his head for the entire event, said he did so to represent the state workers who legitimately fear for their jobs. Many at the rally murmured in agreement when the man told of his predicament over the microphone.

At the picnic in Myers Park, the festivities took on a more relaxed nature as participants appeared to enjoy the opportunity to be in friendly confines and act the way people normally act in a park.

Community activist groups, such as the Tallahassee

About 75 people showed up to Saturday's rally office of the National Organization for Women, the Tallahassee Peace Coalition and the Florida Green Party, took advantage of the gathering to present information at tables around a park pavilion.

One gay couple, John and Patrick, who munched their lunch under a sprawling oak tree and dodged errant frisbee passes, said they were very happy to be in a public setting and able to enjoy each other's company without the threat of discrimination.

"It's so nice we can come to the park and just be ourselves without having to worry about people's reactions," said John, who also said he worked in town as a hairdresser. "I'm finding that the more people know we're here, the more they accept us."

The couple was accompanied by Patrick's mother, an immigrant from Germany who acknowledges her son's sexuality. She expressed anger over society's intolerance of homosexuality.

"I saw what happened in Nazi Germany with the persecution of the Jews and I don't want the same thing happening here with gay people," she said.

Funding

Deborah Susie, executive director of Florida Impact, said it's anybody's guess whether the money will be there when a budget is finally approved.

"Things are pretty messy right now," said Susie, whose organization lobbies for the poor. "We're working real hard."

Last year, with a pool of $8.9 million that lasted about three months, the program helped more than 22,000 families statewide get through the coldest months of the year. Almost 700 of those families were in Leon County.

"I think it is one of the best programs Florida has ever had," Gallagher said. "It's been extremely effective."

But this year, with only $4.1 million left in the kitty, less than 10,000 families got checks, according to HRS officials. Friday afternoon, figures were not immediately available for Leon County.

"Even when the program was fully funded, it didn't meet everyone's needs," said Judy Clark, president of the Florida Coalition for the Homeless. "We made a bad problem worse."

Clark said there is some correlation between the axing of the program and an estimated 20 percent rise in homelessness both locally and statewide last year, although statistically it's impossible to say how much.

Some of those families who couldn't get assistance probably managed to muddle through somehow. But even if a small percentage fell through the cracks, that's hundreds of more families on the streets.

Ditto for next year, Clark says, if the program continues to be underfunded.

"It's the best use of funds because the stress goes to the system in other ways and we end up paying more down the road," Clark said.

Bad rap

Rappers are getting dissed left and right, drawing criticism and censorship from groups as diverse as police and MTV.

The flap over Sister Souljah's statement in the wake of the L.A. riots about Blacks taking a week off from killing each other to kill white people instead became top news when Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton criticized her. This at a conference sponsored by the Rainbow Coalition, no less.

As with any controversial statement, everyone needs to step back from what she said and think about why she said it and what, exactly, she meant.

If she was trying to draw attention to the problem of racism in America, it sure as hell worked. If she wanted to get the Black community to realize how foolish it is to kill one another, that may have been the most effective way to get the message across.

But if she really wanted to see a race war, she deserves every bit of criticism she's getting. The real question is: How wise is Clinton to attack Souljah now? Unlike Clinton, Souljah is not running for elected office and should not be put through the scrutiny Clinton must endure.

As for Clinton, his motivation is unexplained. Does he want to curry the favor of white voters? If Slick Willie is trying to play off Blacks in order to gain white votes, his statements are far more repulsive than Sister Souljah's.

At the same time, Ice-T's heavy metal group Body Count continues to antagonize the law enforcement community with "Cop Killer," a song on the self-titled album. The rap includes the chant "F—k the police" and lines like, "I know your family's grieving, but tonight we get even."

Police associations in Houston, Seattle, Los Angeles and other cities have called for a boycott against Warner Bros., the distributor of the album. The National Rifle Association (motto: "Guns don't kill people, rap albums kill people") has thrown their support to the police as well.

The album Body Count, released in April, was destined to taper off in sales. Except for a cleaned-up version of "There Goes the Neighborhood," the explicit lyrics of the album assured it wouldn't get any radio airtime. And it seemed unlikely rap fans would follow Ice-T over to the metal scene. But the publicity from the boycott has doubled the album's sales in some cities, and caused an overall increase nationwide.

The thought of police officers, whose job—and only job—is to uphold the law, calling for a boycott against a record label is chilling. If the police get away with choking the life force out of Body Count, the grim specter of action being taken against anyone the police dislike rears its ugly, ghost-white head.

Reagan and Bush meet Caspar, the friendly Iran-Contra ghost

BY JACK MCCARTHY
MANAGING EDITOR

Call it the wishful thinking of a most certainly spoiled political child of the Watergate generation. But I'm beginning to truly believe that perhaps those Teflon higher-ups in the Reagan administration who plotted and covered up the Iran-Contra affair might at last be forced to pay for their arrogance and abuse of power.

In this, the 20th anniversary of the Watergate scandal, one could hardly expect a better gift than the indictment of former Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. And indicted, at that, because he refused to tell prosecutors what he and Ronald Reagan knew about illegal arms shipments to Iran—and when exactly they knew it. One can only assume that Weinberger's grand jury indictment sent shock waves from Ronald Reagan's retreat in California to George Bush's White House and his re-election headquarters—particularly the latter.

The Bush folk were undoubtedly downcast upon reading Tim Weiner's lead paragraph in his widely disseminated Knight-Ridder story last weekend:

"Very rarely does the name of the President of the United States appear in a criminal indictment. But there it is—George Bush—woven throughout the 30 page indictment of Caspar Weinberger, the latest criminal case in the Iran-Contra scandal."

Nor I suppose did they care at all for his second graph:

"The case against the former defense secretary is based on an explosive legal theory, according to lawyers and investigators: that some of the highest officials in the land participated in a plot to cover up the crimes of Iran-Contra."

It's hard to believe that special prosecutor Walsh will tackle Bush's role in the affair. Unlike Weinberger, who's being prosecuted for lying under oath to Congress, Bush was never put under oath, so he wasn't given the chance to lie about his certain participation in Iran-Contra. Still, if Walsh had the guts, he could call Bush to testify about what he knew and when he knew it.

It does appear, however, that Reagan could well be indicted. Perhaps Reagan's biggest mistake was his testimony at the John Poindexter trial. The former President really angered prosecutors by winking and smirking as he feigned ignorance about his participation. In all his arrogance, he believed he was immune from prosecution. Just maybe Lawrence Walsh will have the last laugh.

Wallace and Watergate

CBS's Mike Wallace retrospective on the Watergate scandal, aired last Wednesday, was a pretty good show as far as I was concerned. And since Count Nixon's been gaining respectability on the talk show circuit these days, it was great to see Wallace get him:

He played the tape of Tricky Dick and his former Chief of Staff H.R. Haldeman scheming for a way to derail snitch John Dean before he threw Nixon in the bag.

Those who were impressed with Wallace's theory (that Woodward and Bernstein's famous anonymous source was none other than former FBI Director L. Patrick Gray) should read Haldeman's book. The book, The Ends of Power, makes a convincing argument that Deep Throat was John Dean's protege, Fred Fielding.

Another good reason to read Haldeman's book is as an antidote to the nonsense espoused in the controversial book, Silent Coup. The authors of that book, Len Colodny and Robert Gettlin, have been widely praised, especially by the murderous buffoon G. Gordon Liddy, for claiming Nixon was set up by John Dean. Dean, the authors would have us believe, ordered the break-in to protect his wife Maureen, whose roommate allegedly ran a call girl ring at the Watergate.

When Haldeman wrote his book, he was angry at Nixon for not pardoning him. Thus they candidly and repeatedly state that Nixon himself instigated the break-in to find out what relationship Democratic Party Chairman Larry O'Brien had with Howard Hughes. Nixon was obsessed with this subject, and for good reason. His own entanglement with the mad millionaire Hughes in the 1950s almost convinced Eisenhower to keep Nixon off the ticket.

Watergate trivia

Name the first state university in the United States to offer a course on Watergate? Answer: Florida State University. The course was offered in 1978, if memory serves, through the Center for Participant Education and the American Studies Program.

The highlight of the course was when sponsoring professor Jim Harrison and CPE flew in Sherman Skolnick, a portly paraplegic private investigator from Chicago. Skolnick had learned through a leaked FBI document that when Dorothy Hunt, the wife of Watergate burglar E. Howard Hunt, was killed in a plane crash, the FBI was on the scene immediately. You'll remember that Dorothy Hunt was blackmailing Nixon for hush money.

This was most unusual and has never been explained. Charles Colson, who Haldeman says ultimately organized the break-in for Nixon, later said, "I believe the CIA killed Dorothy Hunt."

It was a great course. I got a B.

COMMENTARY

Czechoslovakia likely to split

BY VLADIMIR BAUMGARTEN

SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

Editor's note: First in an occasional series.

Western nations, mesmerized by the violent events of Yugoslavia, failed to notice that Czechoslovakia was ready to disband as well. Already, serious tensions between Czechs and Slovaks resulted in an agreement last week between the two nationalities to go their separate ways in a peaceful parting.

For the moment, the union continues to hold together. But as the Czechs gleefully experiment with a free market economy while Slovak industries are failing and unemployment is rising, problems among the Slovaks will arise because a number of them have traditionally supported a union of Czechs and Slovaks.

In September, Czechoslovakia's bicameral parliament will take up the first steps in deciding when and how the final dissolution will occur.

Slovak nationalism

Slovaks are very sensitive to the fact that they have seldom had a state of their own. One was established in 1939, but unfortunately it was allied to Nazi Germany. In parliament, there was a tug-of-war between Catholics and fascists. Germany exercised a remarkable degree of restraint in this dispute, since it envisioned presenting Slovakia as the Reich's showpiece model to the rest of Eastern Europe. If the Germans had shown the same degree of common sense when they invaded the Soviet Union in June 1941, they might have had an army of over a million Ukrainians fighting against Stalin.

The black mark against the Slovak state came in 1942, when the Nazis offered to "resettle" Slovakia's Jews. The Slovak president, a Catholic priest named Jozef Tiso, was constitutionally obligated to share power with the fascists, who approved of the German plan. Later, when the Vatican informed the Slovak government that the Jews were being sent to extermination camps, Tiso used his influence to halt further deportations. Yet he was condemned to death and hanged as a war criminal in 1947. Since the Czech government and the Communists had already agreed he should hang, a fair trial was not possible.

Not all Slovaks were content with "independence" within the shadow of Nazi Germany. Gustav Husak, leader of the Slovak Communists, preferred "independence" within the shadow of the Soviet Union instead. He headed a determined resistance movement during the war years. Late in 1943, the Soviets informed him they favored a resurrected Czechoslovakia, so he joined forces with the pro-Czech resistance. Both groups were upstaged in 1944 by Soviet partisans parachuted into Slovakia. These Russians blew up bridges and tunnels, shot visiting German officials and provoked a full-scale Nazi invasion of the country. The "Slovak National Rising" resulted in the burning of 64 villages and hundreds of thousands dead.

After Yugoslavia's Tito broke with the Kremlin, Soviet leader Joseph Stalin ordered a wholesale purge throughout Eastern Europe of communists who loved their own country more than they did the Soviet Union. Husak was sentenced to life imprisonment. He refused to admit any wrongdoing even under torture, and in the 1960s was released. Husak supported the liberal reforms of 1968, but when the Soviet Union invaded Czechoslovakia he endorsed the intervention. The one-time Slovak nationalist thus became leader of all Czechoslovakia. He did much to elevate the Slovak standard of living in this capacity, but at a cost to the environment which earned Czechoslovakia the worst track record for pollution in all Europe.

Since the Communists regarded the Catholic Church as a rival symbol of Slovak nationalism, Husak's regime employed water cannons against religious processions well into the 1980s, when such repression had long gone out of fashion in Poland or Hungary. After December 1989, when the Communist Party was deposed from leadership in Czechoslovakia, it expelled Husak as part of a campaign to clean up its image. Ironically, 10 days before his death by respiratory failure on Nov. 18, 1991, he asked for—and received—the last rites of the Church.

separatism, to Czech playwright-turned-president Vaclav Havel. While still a dissident writer, he declared that he would never become a politician. Somehow, even as president, he has kept his word. He is accustomed to answering tough political questions with philosophical generalities which escape most people. He fancies himself as the successor of Czechoslovakia's founding father, philosophy professor Tomas Masaryk. The agnostic Masaryk had only a small following in largely Catholic Slovakia. ## Czechoslovakia considered the Slovak leader to be a war criminal.

When heckled by Slovak nationalists in spring 1990, Havel posed the question, "Where were you last November?" Indeed, Slovak nationalists played little part in the November revolution. The leading party in Slovakia was the Citizens Against Violence, the Slovak wing of the Czech party Civic Forum. Now, however, there is a split in Citizens Against Violence. Meanwhile, in Prague, right wing economists have largely taken over public administration. Their plans to jump-start Czechoslovakia's economy do not include aid to Slovakia, while many Slovaks are not comfortable with the notion of a market economy. Havel, although not personally responsible for anything except holding the country together, has been booed and jostled during visits to Bratislava.

The Hungarian minority

Like other emerging nations in Eastern Europe, Slovakia has an Achilles' heel in the form of a minority problem. Approximately one half million Hungarians live in southern Slovakia. The Slovaks were part of Hungary for a thousand years and share certain cultural traits with the Magyars. In the 19th century, the Hungarian government repressed manifestations of a separate Slovak identity. In revenge, the Magyars incorporated into Czechoslovakia became subject to reverse discrimination. The Magyars in southern Slovakia have become more vocal since the 1989 revolution. They are demanding an "autonomous enclave" in which they would have the right to use their own language exclusively, but in which Slovaks would have to learn Hungarian. Slovaks are convinced Budapest is behind such demands. At one time this minority was anti-Czech. Now, in the face of a militant Slovak nationalism, the Magyars are afraid of the Czechs leaving. If Slovakia were to secede from Prague, the orientation of the Hungarian minority is predictable.

The fragmentation of Europe may have already proceeded too far. There are many Slovaks who still have sentimental ties with the Czechs, but a nation cannot survive on sentimentality alone. The Czechs must be prepared to make concessions. Slovakia should have received a proportional share of the foreign aid which Czechoslovakia had received. The verdict on Jozef Tiso should have been re-examined. Without such concessions, trouble lies ahead in the nation once known as Czechoslovakia.

SUMMER MAIL OUT 1992

What is it?

A special issue mailed to over 10,000 new college students coming to Tallahassee in August for the fall semester. This mailing will be in addition to our regular summer circulation which is distributed locally. There is no extra cost to our advertisers making this issue an exceptional buy.

To whom is this issue mailed?

Florida State and Florida A & M freshman and transfer students will receive this issue of the Flambeau at home. They along with returning college students will spend over $300 million on products and services in Tallahassee during the year. Take this early opportunity to inform the students and their parents about your business.

This year's Mail Out issue is Thursday, July 9th

Deadlines for the issue are:

Friday, July 3rd for a proof

Monday, July 6th if no proof is required.

...tion, and 60 percent are substance abusers.

The people who tend to idealize about how homelessness should be are the same people who have very high expectations of them. But they don't work with them," said Christie Koontz, president of the shelter's board of directors and a faculty member at FSU.

Delores Baines, 29, said she's been homeless for seven years. She says that for the most part she had a normal, happy childhood.

"I didn't come from a very close-knit family. They kind of all went their own way. Then my mother got married to this man and he told her either I go or she would—so she told me to leave. I was 16," she said.

Delores said that at first it was hard because the members of her own family turned their backs on her.

"I put two tubes of glue in my ears because of what they were saying," she said. "I now regret it."

Because of this, she is now totally deaf in her right ear, and the hearing in her left is fading. She speaks of getting out on her own, and about writing a book on her experiences.

But despite the less than ideal circumstances that have surrounded her life, Delores spoke very openly and often about God.

She gives God the credit for saving her life and being her "bread when I was hungry."

campaign, speaking to local groups and going door to door.

"I'm not the type of candidate that just throws money at a race," he said. "You'll probably see me at a lot of intersections with a sign and waving to people."

"I think, if I can get $1,000, I can run as successfully as people spending $20,000," Traphan said, noting that Belin won the FSU student body presidency despite being outspent 35 to 1 during the SG primary.

Traphan said he has several ideas for changes in the way local schools are handled.

He says he would give half of the superintendent's $73,397 annual salary over to classroom use, and would freeze or cut the salaries of other administrators.

According to Traphan, "In the state of Florida and Leon County, administrators' salaries are about 10 percent above the national average, yet teachers' salaries are about 10 percent below the national average."

Traphan also said he wants to see local schools get equal treatment, something he believes is not happening now.

Citing low test scores at Rickards, the only predominantly Black high school in Leon County, Traphan says students will only rise up to the level of expectations set for them, and the current administration hasn't expected much.

Traphan said parents of Rickards' students have told him the district doesn't spend as much money there as at other schools.

"One of my goals would be to equalize per-pupil expenses in local schools," he said.

According to a copy of his transcript, Traphan received a bachelor's degree in computer science from FSU in April 1990 with a grade point average of 3.96. He is currently working towards a master's degree in business and computer science.

Batman Returns' dark genius brings back the Bat in black

BY MARTIN ALLEN

STAFF WRITER

In the Beginning, God created Man and Bat so that both might live in harmony and share dominion over the Earth. But in the fullness of Time, evil men arose and cast the Earth into submission. Evil reigned supreme until a savior came, a man who had taken on the form of The Bat.

Uh huh, right. Pardon the psuedo-religious overtones of the opening paragraph, but after seeing Batman Returns, it's a necessary indulgence.

Director Tim Burton has crafted a wildly indulgent, extremely self-conscious sequel to his trend-setting original Batman, but after a three-year wait (not to mention the last few weeks of media-barrage hyping the movie), does it live up to expectations? Well, yeah, with a few givens.

Things have sort of returned to normal in Gotham. Well, normal for that town anyway. The Joker's long gone and the people are free to gripe at the new mayor like they did the old one and read their tabloid-stories about the mysterious "Penguin-man" living in the sewers.

The Penguin was never one of the more inspired characters in any of the Bat-incarnations over the last half-century. Burton has done the right and proper thing by giving him an origin, and the way he has done it has elevated the Penguin to a much higher level of being.

Florida Flambeau review

The Penguin (played by Danny DeVito) is like unto a cast-off Moses, a tragic messiah figure and blood-thirsty King Herod all at once, living in the Phantom of the Opera's old digs. Added to the mix is a character design that makes him look like Charles Dicken's worst nightmare.

And then there's the Catwoman, a symbol for oppressed women everywhere. Michelle Pfeiffer absolutely steals this movie blind. God help any man who makes a sexist remark about that skin-tight black leather costume, 'cause she can do a Kitten With A Whip routine that will make you wish you had never entered puberty.

And meanwhile, what about Bruce (Batman) Wayne,

Fishin' for tunes at the Downunder

BY MICK BUCHANAN
SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

The cool pop stylings of local bands Buzzfish and Childhood could be just the antidote to summer's stifling heat Wednesday night at the Club Downunder, when the latest installment of Student Campus Entertainment's Summer Music Series takes place.

Buzzfish recently released a single "Menthol," on a three-song, seven-inch slice of green vinyl. The disc also contains the songs "Hangs On A Chain" and "Smalley" and has been distributed to over 300 radio stations nationwide. The band plans to hit the road in July, playing dates in Jacksonville, Orlando, Gainesville and St. Petersburg. In August, the 'fish will head up the Eastern Seaboard to Washington, D.C., then back to Florida through the Carolinas and out to Texas.

What do they sound like? If you took the Cure, Siouxsie and the Banshees, and My Bloody Valentine, mixed them all together in a bucket and added a soupçon of viola, you might come close to Buzzfish's musical concoction.

The Buzzfish lineup includes Luis Arias on vocals and guitar, Wade Smith on guitar, Ashley Grassia on viola and vocals, Patrick Miller on bass and Brian Giblet on drums. The band formed in 1991 from a merging of two Central Florida groups, Innocent Splendor of St. Petersburg and Tactile Cinema of Orlando.

Also playing Wednesday night is Childhood, a quartet comprised of Noel Hartough on vocals and guitars, Jason Gonzalez on guitar, Patrick McDonnell on bass and Jason Chimonedes on drums. They play atmospheric, guitar-dominated pop.

Buzzfish and Childhood play chillin' music Wednesday night at the Club Downunder as part of SCE's Summer Music Series. It's an 18-plus event that's free to all. Music starts somewhere around 9:30.

GOOD NEWS

For better service to FSU and the surrounding community, The Florida Flambeau will be using just one telephone number for all departments.
Starting Monday, June 22 to reach any department:

The Classified Office: .....681-6692
Display Advertising: .....681-6692
The News Room: .....681-6692
The Business Office: .....681-6692

681-6692

For Flambeau Departments

Batman from page 8

who's supposed to be the star of the show? Well, like James Bond, he's there when he needs to be, but he is not from being the focus of the movie. But for a few exceptions, the villains get the best lines.

The best parts of the movie are the sub-plots. Burton and company have deftly balanced a storyline that involves the characters with each other both in and out of costume.

The romance that blossoms between Selina Kyle (Catwoman's alter ego) and Bruce and the undeniable attraction the Bat and the Cat feel for each other is a psychiatrist's wet dream (not to mention the rubber/bondage crowd).

Romance? Bondage? In a comic-book movie? Yes, it's true, it's true . . . even if some of the darker parts are only hinted at. Under Burton's direction, these characters have been given a license to behave more like real people than in any genre film preceding it.

Well, real in a movie sense, that is. Especially this movie. Never mind how many elementary laws of physics this show freely violates. Forget about the decided lack of linear time or just how everyone is able to get those wonderful toys. It doesn't matter.

Existing somewhere between The Twilight Zone and the upcoming animated/live action Cool World, Gotham City is Fantasyland. Go for it.

Batman Returns is currently playing at Capitol Cinemas, Oaklake 6, and the Parkway 5 theatres.

ARTSBRIEFS

The Florida State University Gallery and Museum hosts an exhibit featuring works from its permanent collection today through July 19. The exhibit includes American art glass, pieces from the Carter Collection of Pre-Columbian Artifacts (objects of gold, clay and stone), as well as new acquisitions. The gallery is located in the Fine Arts Building on the corner of W Tennessee Street and Copeland Avenue. Admission is free and hours are 10 a.m. through 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. Call 644-6836 for more information.

Flambeau Arts Editor Kati Kairies and local writer Lee Rohe bare their literary souls Tuesday night at the Grand Finale in the latest installment of the FSU English Department's Summer Reading Series. Kairies reads steamy poetry and Rohe reads cool fiction starting at 8 p.m. Admission is free, drinks are not.

Katya Taylor conducts a workshop on "The Creative Art Of Journalkeeping" at this month's meeting of the Tallahassee Writers' Association Tuesday night at 7:30 in the cafeteria of the Center for Community Education on Easterwood Road near Tom Brown Park. The meeting is free and open to the public.

Slap of Reality journeys all the way from Tampa to play at the Grand Finale Wednesday night, with local band Chupa doing opening honors. It's an 18-plus event, with $2 admission for those 21 and over and $3 admission for the 18-20 year olds. Music starts around 9:30 or thereabouts.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Play out your hunches. September brings a change in an important professional relationship that could improve your earning power. Postpone travel until December when loved ones will be eager to get together. The financial picture brightens with the start of 1993. Expect the best from your romantic partner next March and you will get it!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: fashion designer Bill Blass, actress Tracy Pollan, actor Kris Kristofferson, broadcaster Ed Bradley.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Could make you bristle with imitation. Do not press tread softly and keep your opinions to yourself. An exercise session helps reduce tension.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A relative or friend's wonderful news stimulates your creativity. Congratulations are in order. Work in concert with a partner to increase your financial resources.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A thoughtful discussion with family members is like a breath of fresh air. Let the others tell you what is on their minds for a change. Spend more time with your offspring.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take time to discuss a troublesome matter with a confidant who will respect your privacy. Then turn your attention to recreation. Romance is happiest when both partners know where they stand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may be overly critical of your co-workers or loved ones. Sidestep domestic and career squabbles. Traveling is best postponed. Strive for greater stability in your finances.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You have the inside track at work. A raise or promotion is likely. Stick to the tried-and-true for continued advancement. When dealing with doubters, replace harsh rhetoric with gentle persuasion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A financial situation continues to confound you. Certain relationships are more fragile than you think. Stay centered and things will improve. Your resilience is a source of inspiration.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Start new projects requiring self-discipline. The emotional rewards will soon become apparent. A marriage becomes more fulfilling when both parties learn to confide in each other.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Skills attract new attention today. Use them well! Expressing your ideas to people in the know makes them sit up and take notice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A change of life-style means more creature comforts. You come up with ways to make better use of your living space. Encourage young people to express their feelings in a constructive manner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19): Make certain you fulfill any promises you make today. Get all agreements in writing. Speculative investments and games of chance offer instant rewards.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Challenges turn into opportunities this morning. You get a chance to showcase your special talents. Promote yourself and your ideas with enthusiasm. A confident attitude is contagious.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are wonderfully patient, honest and passionate. Do not expect these youngsters to do anything halfway. It is "all or nothing" for these determined Cancerians! Their keen intelligence and high productivity will delight their employers. They will climb the career ladder quickly, stepping on as few toes as possible. Loyal to a fault, they put great store in romantic fidelity. The ideal spouse will share their high principles and commitment to a lasting relationship.

Trades, heists, etc. could precede draft

BY CHRIS PARKER
STAFF WRITER

Hours after being acquitted of battery and disorderly conduct charges Wednesday, the irascible Charles Barkley was on his way out of Philly.

And by trading Sir Charles for the Suns' Jeff Hornacek, Andrew Lang and Tim Perry, the 76ers set off what should be a highly "interesting" offseason in the NBA.

More offseason action occurs Wednesday night with the NBA draft. It'll air on TNT (cable 3) at 7:30 p.m.

Barkley had been ticketed for a train out of town since his ghostwritten autobiography, which slammed 76ers owner Harold Katz, hit the stores. And with the hiring of former Nugget coach Doug Moe and his passing offense, Barkley became a personality non grata in the Sixers' eyes. Getting its payroll under the NBA's salary cap was probably why Philadelphia went for the Suns' young relative-unknowns.

One question raised by the trade is, what happens to Hersey Hawkins and Armon Gilliam?

Hawkins is a gifted scorer prone to wild streaks of inaccuracy. (Remember the 1991 series when he shot under 30 percent?) But with Hornacek, who led Phoenix in scoring, the 76ers now have a jump shooter and three-point specialist.

Perry is a young power-forward, who came into his own this season. Gilliam has been inconsistent and was blasted by Barkley during the season for his lackadaisical attitude on the glass.

Look for more trades in the City of Brotherly Love.

Meanwhile, the N.Y. Knicks are sitting pretty. More than $3 million under the salary cap, they'll be able to field offers from teams desperate to unload players. The Knicks are looking at free-agency possibilities such as the Clippers' Charles Smith, who becomes a restricted free agent July 1. Incidentally, that's the same date the salary cap goes up.

The numero uno undesirable hombre is Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon. Houston management practically accused "The Dream" of loafing while coming back from an injury during the season. Olajuwon, an intense competitor, bristled at the suggestion and the sides haven't been talking since.

A number of other big names will be included in the summer housecleanings. That may be due to this year's fine crop of college talent and the frustration of strong teams like Indiana, Phoenix and Golden State who want desperately to advance further in the playoffs.

Dallas—with the suspension of Roy Tarpley and the rapidly aging backcourt of Derek Harper and Rolando Blackman—is looking for a deal. Harper-to-Seattle (for Gary Payton) is a possibility. Blackman is being pursued by the Celtics, Knicks and Cavaliers. N.Y. could dump Mark

Some teams may need to make trades to make room for top picks like Christian Laettner (1) and Shaquille O'Neal (r).

COMMENTARY

Jackson for Blackman.

Also look for Dallas to take a flier on a center; maybe Stanley Roberts of Orlando, Portland's Kevin Duckworth or even Felton Spencer or Luc Longley of Minnesota. By the way, Golden State is also interested in the two young Timberwolves.

Minnesota is marketing Pooh Richardson for a power-forward. If they get a taker for Pooh, they'll draft Ohio State's Jimmy Jackson instead of Duke frontliner Christian Laettner. Ley Vaught of the Clippers and Atlanta's Kevin Willis (whose salary balloons from $750,000 to $2 million July 1) are possibilities for Minnesota. Both L.A. and Atlanta are looking for new point guards.

Milwaukee is busily trying to move guards Jay Humphries and Dale Ellis. Ellis, who generally needs a pick or screen to get a shot off, has been a major disappointment to the Bucks. Still, the San Antonio Spurs may want his three-point range to take heat off David Robinson. And they're offering their first round pick.

The Lakers are looking for a marquee player and have allegedly offered James Worthy, Vlade Divac, Elden Campbell and a future first-round pick for Olajuwon. If true, the Rockets' management is even stupider than they appear for not making the deal immediately.

Joining Richardson, Grant, Harper, Payton and Jackson on trams outta town could be Celtic guard Sherman Douglas, the Heat's Brian Shaw and the Spurs' headache Rod Strickland.

And don't be surprised if Indiana's Chuck Person gets a change of scenery even though the Spurs have already rejected a Person-for-Sean Elliot deal.

Cox relieved after Braves win 3 straight

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

ATLANTA—Managers Bobby Cox of Atlanta and Lou Piniella of Cincinnati both insist it's too early in the season to be concerned about any one series, but Cox admits winning three straight against the Reds has him sighing with relief.

The first-place Reds were 4 1/2 games ahead of the second place Braves in the National League West after winning Thursday's opener of the four-game series.

But Sid Bream singled home Terry Pendleton in the sixth inning and Damon Berryhill singled him home in the eighth to back up the five-hit pitching of Mike Bielecki on Sunday and give Atlanta its third straight victory over the Reds, 2-0.

"I really meant it, I'm sure we both did, when we talked about it being just June and too early to put too much emphasis on a series like this," Cox said. "But, it would have been crucial if the Reds had swept and left town 7 1/2 ahead."

As it is, by beating the Reds three straight, the defending National League champion Braves closed to just 1 1/2 games of Cincinnati.

"We've both got about 100 games to go so it's anyone's guess where we'll stand down the road," said Piniella. "Yes, we'd have liked to have gotten out of here with at least a split. We had the pitching to do it but we couldn't get the runs."

The Braves broke up a scoreless duel between Bielecki, 2-3, and Jose Rijo, 3-6, when Pendleton led off the sixth with a single to center, moved to second on an infield out, and scored on Bream's two-out single to right.

BOR: Foreign students must now have an insurance policy

BY RON MATUS
STAFF WRITER

The Florida Board of Regents has ordered state universities to halt the fall registration of thousands of international students until they show proof of adequate health insurance.

The move to enforce the new requirement, which began last month, has caught many students at Florida State and Florida A&M universities by surprise.

Many say it has left them in a financial bind, and others called it downright unfair.

"We just had this policy dropped on us," Gerard Osborne, an FSU graduate student who hails from Trinidad, said Tuesday. "It's sort of rough to adjust your finances to keep up with this."

"It is sort of discriminatory," said Shanti Gomatam, an Indian student at FSU. "Why don't American students have to have insurance?"

The directive putting the halt on registration was handed down to university administrators in a May 15 memo from State University System Chancellor Charles Reed. It says that unless international students can prove they have health insurance which meets specific Board of Regents requirements, they won't be allowed to register for fall classes.

Pat Haney, the vice chancellor of health affairs for the state universities, said the impetus behind the policy, which has been in the works for several years, was to make international students accountable for their medical bills.

She said most international students do not have health insurance, and between 5,000 and 6,000 students around the state could be affected by the new requirement.

City disapproves moving Lozano trial to Tally

BY JAY SCHROER
ASST. NEWS EDITOR

Though it has no legal bearing, Tallahassee City Commissioners unanimously passed a resolution Wednesday opposing the relocation of the retrial for Miami police officer William Lozano to Leon County.

The resolution, which cites the "significant civil unrest and violence" that erupted in Miami over the incident concludes that "... the retrial of such case could present various obstacles to the progress currently being made in the area of race relations in (Tallahassee)."

Beating their drums

Chuck Kunle, Mike Hunter and Walter Kelleher were among those gathered on Sunday for the Tallahassee Men's Council's dusk to dawn day of ritual drumming.

Men's Council dissatisfied with patriarchy

BY JIM RICHARDSON
STAFF WRITER

Something more than shade trees and summer heat greeted visitors to Myers Park on Father's Day. From a grassy glen in the middle of the park came a pounding bass rhythm, like the sound of an approaching boom car playing the latest rap. Only the instrument behind the beat wasn't a high-tech, 300-watt woofer, but a simple wooden hoop stretched with a rawhide and struck with a padded stick.

The man behind the mallet was Bob Reid, a bearded, thirtysomething member of the Tallahassee Men's Council. Together with fellow members and the occasional passers-by, the council held session on Father's Day, drumming from dawn to dusk in a ritual open to "all men, fathers, sons, grandfathers and grandsons." Pounding on everything from empty water jugs to congas and African talking drums, the men took part in an event repeated in cities around the country—a celebration of fatherhood and a happening that increased the visibility of what has popularly been tagged the "men's movement."

The phenomenon is not new to Tallahassee; the Men's Council began meeting more than two years ago, and is one of a number of local groups that range from more formal therapy settings to unstructured drumming and discussion. All, however, are manifestations of a growing dissatisfaction with the roles Western society has placed men into.

"As a man, you're taught to be rough, strong, confident. You're not supposed to be insecure. You're not supposed to cry or show emotion or frustration," said member Tom Taylor.

"There are a wealth of feelings and nurturing energies that have been very wrongly trained out of men, starting in the schoolyard," Reid added. "The men's movement is nothing more than men saying we've been cheated emotionally."

Part new-age spiritualism, part shamanism and part Jungian theory, the movement is gaining momentum. Men are gathering for everything from drumming sessions to full-blown retreats where businessmen don loincloths and dance around bonfires to rediscover their primal masculinity.

In academe, universities are offering courses in "men's studies." In popular culture, magazines like Men's

Gunman abducts restaurant clerk

A Miami Subs restaurant clerk was abducted early Wednesday morning by a man threatening to shoot her with a gun. Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Annette Garrett said.

The suspect entered the store at 2:45 a.m. Wednesday asking to use the bathroom. The clerk showed him the men's restroom and then went into the women's restroom to restock supplies. The man followed her.

Once inside the restroom, the man put his hand over the victim's mouth and told her not to scream. He then told her to take off her clothes and threatened to shoot her with a handgun. He exchanged shirts with the woman, so that the suspect was wearing a Miami Subs uniform.

The gunman escorted the woman out of the store, led her north toward Frenchtown Lake and directed her to a parking lot. The suspect, a 15- to 18-year-old male, then reached toward his waistband as if to retrieve a gun.

The victim told police he was walking near the intersection of Fourth Avenue and Dewey Street at 2:30 a.m. Wednesday when he was approached by a man who said, "So you're the f—king nigger causing problems for us."

The suspect, a 15- to 18-year-old male, then reached toward his waistband as if to retrieve a gun.

Apartment manager attacked

The manager of a Southside apartment complex was attacked by several men early Wednesday morning who beat him and threatened to shoot him—apparently in retaliation for his anti-drug efforts at the complex, Garrett said.

The victim told police he was walking near the intersection of Fourth Avenue and Dewey Street at 2:30 a.m. Wednesday when he was approached by a man who said, "So you're the f—king nigger causing problems for us."

The suspect, a 15- to 18-year-old male, then reached toward his waistband as if to retrieve a gun.

The assault, which took place at the Southside apartment complex, was the latest in a series of attacks on the victim, who has been threatened and beaten several times in the past.

The victim told police he was walking near the intersection of Fourth Avenue and Dewey Street at 2:30 a.m. Wednesday when he was approached by a man who said, "So you're the f—king nigger causing problems for us."

The assailants remain at large.

Teenagers attack park worker

A white employee of the Tallahassee Parks and Recreation Department was attacked by a group of Black teenagers at the city's new Southside Park Monday afternoon, TPD spokesperson Phil Kiracofe said Tuesday.

The victim reported that he was at the park on Paul Russell Road at 1:30 p.m. working on the bike trail when he was approached by the teens. They shouted racial slurs and threw rocks, but the victim suffered no injuries. Because the victim couldn't identify the youths, no arrests have been made.

At the moment, Maude said, there's simply a lot of confusion. Most people are scrambling to find the $400 or so it takes to purchase insurance that meets the BOR requirements.

Insurance from page 1

(international) students ... had staggering medical bills but no medical insurance," Haney said. "The physicians, the hospitals, the health care providers were perplexed that the university did not have some means to pay the bills drawn up by their students."

"The health care provider could say, 'You brought them here,' " and try to sue, added BOR spokesperson Pat Riordan. "But the most important reason (for the requirement) is that it protects the student."

FSU and FAMU officials said they began trying to notify international students of the new policy as soon as they received the chancellor's memo. FSU has between 800 and 850 international students and FAMU has about 140.

But some FSU students still didn't get word until they tried to register for classes last week.

"Students weren't given warning and a lot of students are finding their registration's been dropped," said Stacy Maude, a South African student who is president of the FSU International Students Association. "We're very upset with the fact that we weren't given specific advance notice."

FSU students have been particularly hard hit by the new policy because registration there has already begun. Students are concerned that halting their registration may affect which classes they get in the fall.

Maude also pointed out that many students, regardless of which university they attend, will run into problems because they go home for the summer.

"They're going to call and their registration is going to be blocked and they aren't going to be able to be here to straighten it out," she said. "They're going to come home in the fall and not be able to get any of those classes."

Both Maude and FSU administrators say many international students had been expecting a health insurance requirement to come down the SUS pipeline at some point. But they were also expecting fair warning.

At the moment, Maude said, there's simply a lot of confusion. Most people are scrambling to find the $400 or so it takes to purchase insurance that meets the BOR requirements, and the rest are haggling with insurance companies to beef up coverage they already have.

"If the students are upset, they have a right to be," said Jan Daly, interim director of FSU Student Health Services.

"Everyone needs a little bit of insurance," agreed Delores Randolph, program assistant for FAMU's Special Programs and Services. "But they need a little time to work things out."

"A lot of our students don't have that much money and $400 could mean the difference between eating and not."

BOR spokesperson Riordan tossed the blame back into the universities' court. He said the policy was approved by the BOR last fall with the full intent of it going into effect this fall, and that it was the universities' responsibility to get the word out.

But at this point, he added, it doesn't matter.

"I realize getting short notice ... it is a very difficult situation," Riordan said. "The reality is that this policy is coming into effect."

Many students said they did not have a problem with the basic premise behind the policy. Although some, like FSU's Gomatam, wondered why proof of health insurance wasn't universal, others said it was understandable.

"A lot of students come from countries where health insurance is basically a right and the governments provide it," Maude said. "And they come over here expecting the same treatment."

"If I was hurt, I guess the American government would probably have to take care of me," said FAMU student Pierre Ferguson, who hails from the Bahamas. "They just want to avoid that."

But they still had problems with other aspects of the new policy, including the specificity of the BOR guidelines.

Among other things, the guidelines call for a $200,000 minimum cap for illness or injury and a $7,500 minimum cap for repatriation.

"We were under the impression that most insurance companies would be acceptable," Maude said. "But now it turns out that they're coming down on most insurance policies."

According to Daly from FSU health services, the university has so far cleared 103 students under the new policy. Of those, she said, only 15 already had coverage that met the BOR's requirements.

For those students without insurance, the BOR has selected a policy with a company called MEGA Life, based in Dallas, Tex. The annual rate for the MEGA Life policy is $465, although a downpayment chunk of $175 is enough to begin registration.

"If they can meet the requirements with their own company, that's fine," Daly said. "The problem is there aren't too many companies that meet these requirements."

The First problem

On the face of it, Monday's Supreme Court ruling against a St. Paul, Minn. "hate crime" ordinance was a positive decision in the ongoing struggle to uphold First Amendment rights in this country. A majority of the embers of the highest court in the land unanimously voted for scrapping the ordinance, which—like other states and municipalities around the country—sought to punish crimes motivated by hatred toward racial, religious, ethnic and other minorities.

Seemingly, it makes sense that any person or group's constitutional right to freedom of expression, regardless of what that expression is, is holy ground and shouldn't be tampered with. That was probably the thinking of Justice Antonin Scalia, who wrote for the court majority that the Minnesota law doesn't live up to First Amendment standards because it seeks to suppress speech based on its message, or content.

But aside from the fact that Scalia's ruling was arbitrary—he worded his opinion in a manner that leaves open the possibility the Minnesota law could be applied in other instances of hateful speech besides color, creed, religion and gender—it denies the power relationships that exist between minorities and the dominant white culture in this country.

There are different dynamics involved when an atmosphere of oppression is created by hateful, violent, or prejudiced speech toward an often powerless minority. To deny that fact is to deny reality and, in many cases, to deny our less than respectable history when it comes to race relations.

The Minnesota case is the result of an instance in which a group of teenagers burned a cross, Ku-Klux-Klan style, inside the fenced yard of a Black family. While there is opportunity to prosecute here under vandalism and trespassing laws, one must consider the terror, and ultimately, the alienation felt by this family, which lived in an all-white neighborhood—terror and alienation that further compounds the already inequitable relationship they find themselves in as minorities in the U.S.

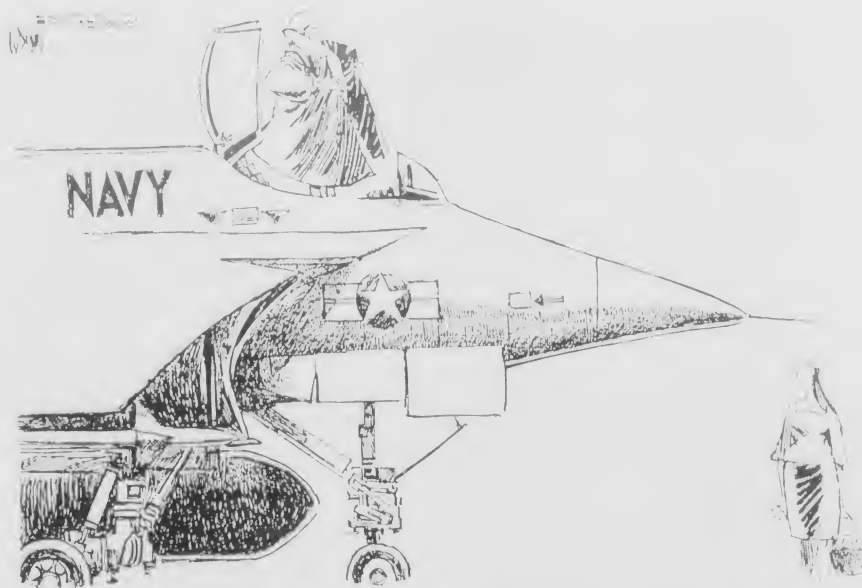

As Supreme Court Justice Byron White pointed out in his written dissent, the ruling, in essence, puts forth the argument that hateful, violent "fighting words" are a form of debate.

While the Supreme Court ruling may in some way pan out to be a positive reinforcement of the First Amendment, there's no question that it is necessary to impose, as in the case of Florida (where the hate crime law is not a separate offense), stronger penalties for crimes based on hatred. History is our best witness.

Editor:

I wish to express my appreciation for Don Bowmer's May 21 article, "The Disability Act is a Start, But There's More to be Done." Mr. Bowmer's contribution to public awareness over the Americans with Disabilities Act is a welcome addition to the Flambeau's editorial voice. He is quite right to point out that the ADA is only a start and many barriers, physical and attitudinal, remain before citizens with disabilities can take their rightful place in the mainstream.

However, one of the biggest barriers yet to be removed is derogatory language, which demeans people with disabilities. When writing about people with disabilities, and speaking to or for them, it is essential to use the proper language.

For example, the phrase, "wheelchair-bound" is considered to be one of the rudest and least accurate expressions to describe a person who uses a wheelchair. "Wheelchair-bound" describes an instrument of mobility as if it were a prison. As for the other unfortunate phrase in this article "mobility-afflicted," it is even worse. "Afflicted" means sick; does Mr. Bowmer mean to imply that using a wheelchair is a sign of sickness?

Language is not a trivial issue. The image of disabled people as sick, helpless and passive has enabled community planners to erect the types of barriers and discriminatory policies Mr. Bowmer describes. Eliminating offensive language will go a long way toward empowering individuals with disabilities to remove the barriers in their path.

What's in a word? A lot. Use them carefully, Mr. Bowmer.

Go home, Bully for God

Editor:

Randy Brien, a conservative member of the American Family Association (AFA), states in the June 11 Flambeau that "I cannot sit back when there are wrongs and injustices going on..." I too have trouble sitting back while narrow-minded stupidity is spouted.

Mr. Brien and the people like him are missing the point. No clear-thinking person wants to fill an auditorium showing erotic films with impressionable five-year-old children. The cure to that danger is not to infringe on the rights of consenting adults to view such films, nor is the cure to take the broader action of stripping the stores of books and films which don't meet the AFA criteria. We could grow very tired of watching reruns of Bambi and The Waltons.

These AFA people are dangerous, of course, which is clear to anyone who understands constitutional democracy. The way I see it (and I could be wrong, unlike the AFA), one of the biggest dangers to our society remaining free is insisting that everyone else believe precisely the way we do.

Mr. Brien and his ilk worship God and maintain "Christian" values. Why is it that part of those "values" is forcing everyone else to think like they do? Why must they impose their ideas and "values" on people who choose to believe differently than they?

In the article on June 11, Mr. Brien stated "the only true set of values is a Biblical set of values." While that may be true for him and I respect his ideas, who is he to tell me what to believe, what to read or what to like or dislike? Why is it so important to people like Brien that others accept their view of how and why this world was created?

It is a shame that the substance of what Mr. Brien says is lost in his silly rhetoric and dogmatic attack upon books and films, because in many ways he is correct. Many of the problems in this country are due to a disintegration of the family unit. That is one of the reasons we have so much government regulation; government has simply had to take over many of the duties formally performed by the extended family, such as settling minor disputes and caring for the elderly. I just don't think that the answer to the broad-based social problem is making sure that I can't rent X-rated movies when I want to, or read the kind of books and magazines I might desire to read.

I might add that there are many other religious sects and organizations other than Christianity which promote values that would help remedy the problems in this country. People who subscribe to the Christian belief do not have some kind of monopoly on being decent folks.

I will be happy to chip in a few dollars to buy Mr. Brien a ticket back to Illinois, since he is obviously not happy with what is going on here. Maybe in Illinois, their only problems are dirty movies and smut magazines. Here, we have other things that need to be addressed rather than trying to convert everybody to Christianity and make them go limp watching movies like "101 Dalmations." Here, we need to address hunger, ignorance and bigotry.

Belin chooses second chief of staff

BY JOEL ARNOLD
STAFF WRITER

Striking a tone of reconciliation, Florida State University Student Body President Jeanne Belin said Wednesday she's readying a second candidate for the position of chief of staff to go before the student senate for approval.

After her first choice failed late last month in what some student government officials called dirty politics, Belin said Jeanne Campbell, who has been acting chief of staff since last week, is the likely replacement for outgoing deputy chief of staff Danielle Sylvester.

Sylvester's resignation came Campbell after the senate Elections and Appointments Committee failed her and another of Belin's nominees for cabinet positions last month.

But Belin added the position still needs to be advertised before a nominee is sent for senate approval sometime within the next couple of weeks.

Belin, a Monarchy Party member, said Campbell—who is not associated with a political party—would serve as a “conciliatory role model” and would have a less stressful relationship than Sylvester with the senate, which is dominated by former Seminole Party members.

“We did an evaluation of our relationship within student government and we decided to take a redirection,” Belin, a former Seminole Party member, said Tuesday. “(Campbell) is the type of person who gets along with everybody. . . . I really think this is a positive change in the way the executive branch and student government (can) get by the tensions and the b.s.”

Sylvester, a former Seminole Party member, blamed “administrative conflict” for her resignation, refusing to clarify her reasoning further. But in the past, Sylvester has criticized the senate for playing politics by rejecting her candidacy.

“I will not be more specific than that,” said Sylvester.

Sylvester added that Campbell, who has been director of SG’s cabinet-level special projects department this summer, would be a good choice if approved by the senate.

“I have faith in Jeanne Campbell,” Sylvester said. “She’s a wonderful, wonderful person and she will do a great service to the students of Florida State.”

Campbell, who said she has never been a member of the Monarchy Party or the now-defunct Seminole Party, expects to be easily approved by the E&A committee and the senate.

“I’ve been confirmed once already,” Campbell said, referring to her Special Projects position. “I really don’t see any major problem coming up.”

Senate president Jennifer Tankersley was out of town this week and could not be reached for comment.

TCC moves to beef up on-campus security

BY BEN RHODES
FLAMBEAU WRITER

Reacting to annual enrollment increases and a rise in the amount of violent crime on campus, the Tallahassee Community College Board of Trustees voted unanimously Wednesday evening to hire the Leon County Sheriff’s Department to provide additional security on TCC’s campus.

The supplemental security will provide two fully trained officers with at least three years of road experience. Each officer will have a patrol car, carry a firearm and have full arresting powers, as well as handling traffic violations. The contract calls for a four year period of service beginning Aug. 10, 1992.

The total cost of the additional security to the college over the four years will be $328,278. In addition to the $21,000 annual salary and other benefits each officer receives, the school will also pick up the tab for two new patrol cars in the first year and replacements in the third year.

The board earlier approved a 50 cent per credit hour fee increase that will raise about $114,000 next year. Money left over after covering the salaries and equipment of the new officers will be used to raise the salaries of the existing staff.

The cost of the patrol cars represents a sizeable portion of the total cost, but according to TCC President Hinson, it is the Sheriff Department’s policy that all officers have a patrol car to drive home in at the end of the day.

Scott Gaby, a board member, added officers would need vehicles in order to be effective.

“The issue also, was to have an officer on campus who is armed, and our current officers aren’t armed,” said board member Joe Alexander.

Vice President of Administrative Services, Tom Hanna said, “The issue of adding more security was initiated by the students. They’ve been very adamant about it.”

The school currently employs 10 security guards—eight patrol personnel and two supervisors. The eight patrolmen currently earn a base salary of $14,000 per year, but the board foresees having to restructure their salary and redefine their duties once the Sheriff’s Deputies are added.

The board expects some conflict when two Sheriff’s deputies come to campus and report to a supervisor who earns considerably less money than they do.

“You can’t have an officer coming on to campus saying, ‘I’m going to do as I please.’ That’s going to create a lot of problems,” Alexander said. “You have to have someone for that person to report to.”

Guys from page 1

Journal, and Details are challenging more traditional journals like Playboy and Esquire with investigations of men's issues. On talk shows, exponents such as Robert Bly make the rounds, trying to redefine what it means to be a man, and how to discover that identity.

"In other cultures, there have been rituals, how to deal with loss, success, failure, marriage, people dying," Reid said. "We have rituals, but they don't give us all we need."

Those rituals have been lost in our increasingly competitive and technical culture.

"In tribal systems, even where the tribes are very large, they have a men's lodge and a women's lodge, and each creates their own ritual space," Reid said. "In ancient cultures, there were mentors. Sometimes there were things the fathers couldn't do, but the shamans and the teachers were there."

That is not the case today, Reid said.

"One thing I think is clear is that there are a lot of men out there who for a couple of generations have tended to be initiated by women," Reid said. "The fathers weren't there, and even if he was there, he was exhausted, or spacing in front of the television. Emotionally, he wasn't there. It takes a man to initiate a boy into manhood, and it takes a woman to initiate a girl into womanhood."

"Women have their mysteries and men have theirs," added Marian Reid. "It's not that one's right and one's wrong. But the kids are getting nurturing from day-care centers."

Some, however, have greeted the men's movement with leery skepticism. After all, the whole of history thus far has been written by men and about men. Men hold the positions of power, and men pull the strings.

But those on the inside say that's not what the movement is about.

"Guys in the men's movement are becoming conscious of being disappointed with the patriarchy and realizing they don't identify with it," member Chuck Kunle said. "I was playing a role. When I got closer to what I was, my gut level feelings, I became more aware."

"From a woman's perspective, the men's movement is a matter of men rediscovering their own feminine side," Marian Reid added. "As a female, I think the men's movement is really important. I've seen changes in Bob since he's been involved with the drumming and the movement. He's more open. He has an ability to talk about things with me. I may not like everything I hear . . . but our relationship is stronger."

In fact, says Bob, the establishment has tried to belittle the movement or dismiss it, because it questions the foundations of contemporary patriarchal society.

"There's almost a conspiracy of misunderstanding," he said. "The status quo is threatened. What are they going to say when I don't want to work because I'd rather take care of my kid?"

An integral part of that subversion is the idea that men must first rediscover their place in society.

"In Jungian analysis, the patriarchy is essentially a manifestation of an immature adult culture—immature in the sense that they've denied their archetypes," Bob Reid said. "To get out of that, you've got to get out of this societal system."

One way to do that is through the ritual drumming that precedes the Men's Council meetings. It is an exercise, Reid said, that helps break through cultural restrictions.

"Men are competitive," he said. "But when you drum, you can't be competitive. If you are, you just take everyone else with you."

"In regular groups, drumming is followed by gutsy rap sessions," added Kunle. "The drumming helps us to loosen up. It acts as a facilitator for getting at the subliminal feelings and talking them out."

The process, however, is slow.

"When men can take the openness and feeling and show their joy and grief and be able to greet someone they know with a hug instead of a cold handshake, that will be progress," Bob Reid said.

The Tallahassee Men's Council meets July 11. For more information, call Bob Reid at 668-7710.

"It's a step in the right direction," Rev. R. N. Gooden, a community leader said Wednesday night. "We appreciate the city taking this leadership."

Gooden, speaking for several local Black ministers, had requested the resolution two weeks ago during a discussion of the Tallahassee Community Relations Council, a new group established by the city to address race relations in the community.

Although she voted for it, Commissioner Dorothy Inman-Crews said she did not expect the resolution to have much effect, noting the Tallahassee City Commission has no power to control court decisions.

"It doesn't amount to a hill of beans to those moving the trial," she said during a break before the vote Wednesday night.

Inman-Crews added if city leaders fear the trial, more time and effort should be spent addressing race relations here.

Commissioner Steve Meisburg said he believes the problems of racial unrest have not been adequately addressed by any city in the country.

"I suggest take it back to Miami," said Meisburg, who noted Miami was likely to experience violence regardless of where the trial was held.

Mayor Bob Hightower agreed, saying that since the crime occurred in Miami, the trial should be held there.

However, since the basis of Lozano's successful appeal was that the Miami jury may have been afraid to find him innocent due to fears of rioting, it is unlikely the retrial will be held in Miami.

Asked to suggest another location, neither Meisburg nor Hightower could offer one.

In a trial scheduled for October 6, Lozano is charged with manslaughter in the deaths of a Black motorcyclist and his passenger in Miami's predominantly-Black Overtown section in January 1989.

On Martin Luther King Jr. Day 1989, Lozano shot Clement Lloyd in Overtown. Allan Blanchard, Lloyd's passenger, died when the motorcycle crashed. Riots began hours after the shooting as word spread throughout the community.

Lozano testified at his original trial that he fired at Lloyd because he feared he was going to be run down by the motorcycle.

Lozano was convicted on two counts of manslaughter in December 1989 by a racially mixed jury in Miami. However, his conviction was overturned last summer by a state appeals court that ruled the jury may have been pressured by fears an acquittal could trigger another riot in Miami.

Despite the conviction, there was more rioting in Miami when the verdict was announced.

WELCOME TO ROBYN'S WEIRD WORLD

Welcome to Robyn's own weird, wonderful world

BY KATI KAIRIES
ARTS EDITOR

In Robyn Hitchcock's world, life is a distinctly skewed affair. One only has to listen to any of his quirky recordings (Globe of Frogs, Queen Elvis and his latest, Perspex Island) to be sucked into a weird universe populated by preternatural amphibians, insects, plants and people.

Hitchcock and his faithful band, the Egyptians (Andy Metcalfe and Morris Windsor), will fill the Moon with weirdness Sunday night when they play an all-acoustic set, preceded by special guests Uncle Green. According to those who have experienced Hitchcock and the Egyptians unplugged and in person say it's indeed a wondrous thing.

Hitchcock, Metcalfe and Windsor started out in the late '70s as the Soft Boys, and have played together off and on ever since, spewing forth a veritable plethora of recordings—somewhere in the vicinity of 30 albums, including Hitchcock's solo efforts. Hitchcock and the Egyptians are probably most famous in America for Globe of Frogs (which contained the whimsical yet chilling single "Balloon Man") and its successor, Queen Elvis. The band's latest recording, Perspex Island, is meant to spread Hitchcock's bizarre gospel to a more mainstream audience.

Robyn Hitchcock

But that doesn't mean he's gotten any more normal. Remember, this is the guy who wrote such queer and slightly menacing tunes as "My Wife and My Dead Wife" and "The Man With the Lightbulb Head" (both from 1985's Fegmania). His live acoustic shows are said to be manic and insane, with Hitchcock going off on wild tangents and pulling the audience with him. Check out his solo acoustic recording Eye for a little taste of what's in store for Sunday night. It'll be like going to another planet—Robyn's World.

Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians, with special guests Uncle Green, play acoustically Sunday night at the Moon. The show is free to Florida State University students with validated IDs, $8 for others who purchase tickets in advance, $9 the day of the show. Doors open at 8 p.m., show starts around 9.

Rally 'round your radio station and get in tune on Friday night

BY CLARK PERRY

STAFF WRITER

When a listener-supported radio station needs money, it's often hard to get anyone to listen.

That's one reason why local alternative station WVFS V-89 is presenting its Third Annual Summer Benefit Concert tomorrow night at Club 506. You can hear live bands for a buck each ($4 total admission), and help the station meet its operating expenses at the same time.

Contributing their sonic sensibilities will be the Tallahassee-based bands Gruel, Oxenchunk and Ultraboy. South Carolina's punkish Thought Crime fills out the benefit's bill.

"With the exception of the pledge drive, our annual benefit is crucial to continuing our service," Maria Bakkepalulo, the station's public relations director, said Wednesday. "Since V-89 is a non-commercial station, we must depend on community contributions to keep Tallahassee's new music source on the air."

Chris White, the station's program director, said the station wants to have fun making ends meet.

"We just did a huge spring pledge drive," he said, "but we're constantly trying to keep up with our operating budget."

"In my view, somebody would pay $4 to see this show anyway. The fact that it's going to benefit V-89 is a double reason to attend."

The benefit is designed to give listeners a break from the standard pledge drive routine.

"We do a birthday party every year and a summer benefit every year," noted White. "They all entail live music."

Gruel and Oxenchunk are two tried-and-true Tallahassee-based bands who know how to please a crowd. Gruel just returned from a mini-tour of the Eastern Seaboard (during which they performed at New York's legendary CBGB's) to promote its new CD, Out of Mind.

Ultraboy is a new area band that features members of now-defunct groups Zen Lemmings and the Singing Spoons. This benefit marks their first live appearance.

Thought Crime's members are based at Clemson University in South Carolina. V-89's Errol Kolosine describes their music as "real aggressive guitar attack type stuff. From all that we've heard, this group is well-known for its live shows."

Mike Coleman, formerly a Singing Spoon, is now an Ultraboy.

And Kolosine added that there will be special limited edition benefit T-shirts on sale at the show.

"This is one of the coolest shirts I've ever seen," Kolosine said, pointing out that last year's well designed shirts sold out quickly, leaving many people empty-handed.

The WVFS Third Annual Summer Benefit Concert begins at 9 p.m. Friday at Club 506. This is an 18-plus show. Admission is $4. Doors open at 8 p.m.

What? Peter Allen dead of AIDS? Impossible. I can see Freddy Mercury. I mean, the cat swung. But Peter? He always seemed so butch to me. Just one more thing before we start. Is it me or does it seem that the new requirement to be a star is to have been sexually molested as a child? It's about the same as the percentage of people in the U.S. who claim to have American Indian blood in them. Oh, I know my name is Siobhan MacGillcuddy but I'm a third Sioux!

Freejack (1991)—Thoroughly absurd "sci-fi" film with about as many unique elements of science fiction as Far And Away. This doll ed up action film consists of the premise that in the future, due to pollutant and poor standards of living, healthy bodies will have to be retrieved from the past in order for the privileged few to continue living. Mick Jagger forsakes grand-standing for bad acting in Freejack.

Pacino in the title roles as struggling regulars who find love amongst the platters and eggs of a greasy spoon at which they both toil. Average but inspiring story is played well by both leads and contains the right blend of melancholy, hope, humor and despair to work well. Kate Nelligan has a nice supporting part as a flirtatious waitress and the direction by Garry Marshall is nicely contained. An appealing and smart love story.

The Butcher's Wife (1991)—Demi Moore plays a Southern clairvoyant who meets a New York butcher (George Dzundza) when his boat pulls up outside her grandma's lighthouse down in Dixie. Through prior visions they agree to marry and move to Manhattan. Moore, with a Southern accent as natural as Twinkie cream and a performance as honest as a Scotch-soaked lawyer, begins to involve herself and her premonitions with the various characters of the neighborhood. Sexual and emotional mishaps begin to occur and love springs in the most unusual places. Silly film has no charm, little humor and a busload of predictability. Jeff Daniels appears with his typically affable boredom. Mary Steenburgen and Frances McDormand (two of our finest actresses) are wasted in small roles. More romantic crap for those with the Ghost mentality.

FSU grad's war memoir is a collection of moving images

BY CLARKE PERRY

STAFF WRITER

War may be hell, but it's a proven testing ground for writers.

Hemingway believed that war was the perfect setting for any novel, because it compressed some of life's elements—love, hate, honor and betrayal—into one short and definite time frame.

The Vietnam War has produced a fascinating subgenre of war writing. Some of the best books—like Robert Mason's Chickenhawk, Stephen Wright's Meditations in Green and Tim O'Brien's Going After Cacciato—resonate in the reader's mind with all the shocking clarity of violent newsreel footage.

Other works are more personal and private. Danny Lliteras, a Vietnam veteran and Florida State University graduate, has produced one such work, called In A Warrior's Romance (Hampton Roads Publishing Co.).

Lliteras was in Vietnam from 1969 to 1970, serving with the U.S. Navy. A native of Miami, he went into the war like so many other young people—with wide eyes and a racing heart.

In his book, we see what his eyes saw and read what his heart felt. In A Warrior's Romance is a collection of black and white photographs and scattered verses of haiku documenting his time in 'Nam.

The photos are gritty and unassuming. Many of them are slightly out of focus or aren't framed with great care. This doesn't hurt the book, however; such imperfect presentation lends an air of authenticity to the daily life Lliteras seeks to document.

He shows us the men he served with, the Vietnamese citizens he knew and befriended. Some of the photos are staged, and everyone smiles, as in a snapshot of three off-duty soldiers (Lliteras and two buddies) standing on a beach, drinking beer with their arms around each other. Another shows an expressionless young man standing outside a tiny thatched-roof chapel.

Other photos—indeed, the best ones—are more candid. In one, Lliteras zooms in on the hand of a soldier. There's a thick, Army-issue watchband around the wrist; the fingers hold the burning nub of a cigarette.

Lliteras' verse is another matter. This difficult form, consisting of three brief, unrhyming lines describing a short scene or mood, doesn't often lend itself to such universalities as those which Lliteras seeks to address.

While some simply mystify the reader, others strike a powerful chord: "He hadn't learned to shave yet/He was young and handsome/When he had his head." This effective piece is printed opposite a page that features a soldier's "death card," a card with a death's head centered on the ace of spades.

Opposite a picture of a cleared field littered with huge insectile tractors, Lliteras writes: "bulldozers at rest . . . men eating their lunch under the only tree left." Lliteras' verse works best when it tries to be something more than a caption for the photograph with which it appears.

In A Warrior's Romance is a boldly quiet book. There is no real bloodshed here, no loud condemnation of the utter mindlessness of war. Too often writers reach for the same tools, and truth is reduced to cliché.

Instead, Lliteras has chosen to focus on the quieter, more human moments between battles, when fear loosens its grip on the heart a little and lets a soldier smile, have a beer and think about home. Lliteras' book is an intensely personal and ultimately moving memoir of Vietnam.

two-thirds of newspapers that are never recycled.

CALENDAR

I AM THE DOOT-DOOT LADY, AND YOU WILL DO as I say. Read the following Round-Up to plumb the depths (not to mention the giddy, dizzying heights) of local culture.

As usual, John Blue makes merry during Friday's Happy Hour at Bimini's. Snidely Whiplash twirls their musical moustache Friday and Saturday nights, and Sunday's Dead Night features a juke box instead of the usual live band. Call 575-4183 to find out why. At the Mill Bakery and Eatery on the Parkway, Phoenix Uprising lifts spirits during Friday's Happy Hour and Zombie Birdhouse sing about sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll Friday and Saturday nights. Cover is $2. Call 877-4848 for the particulars.

Tonight at the Grand Finale, the Mustard Seeds and Giant Steps serenade the crowd in the coolness (literal and figurative) of the upstairs parlor. Friday and Saturday nights, Work For Higher does their soulful, funky, tuneful best to make you shake your moneymaker all night long. This is the Doot-Doot Lady's pick of the weekend. There is a cover charge, but it'll be worth it. Call 599-9358 if you don't believe me. Club 506 is the scene of a huge musical extravaganza Friday night, all on behalf of V-89, YOUR college radio station. Featured bands include local faves Oxenchunk, Ultraboy and the might Gruel, and South Carolina's Thought Crime. Admission is a mere $4, and believe me, you'll get a lot of bang for your bucks. The mayhem should start around 9:30 or so.

Put your happy antlers on at Bullwinkle's tonight, Friday and Saturday with Real Men. Get there early for Friday's Happy Hour and check out Righteous Cadillac with Donny Crenshaw (yes, THE Donny Crenshaw). On Sunday, Carlos and Friends are on tap. Ain't never no cover at the 'Winks. Friday night is Stetson's Country Night at the Moon, featuring the McCarters. There are two shows for the two-steppin' crowd, one at 10 p.m. and one at midnight. Doors open at 7 for free country dance lessons, cover charge is $3 after 9. Sunday night Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians get arty but not farty with special guests Uncle Green. It's free for FSU students with validated IDs, $8 for others in advance, $9 the day of the show.

Tonight is Open Mike night (is Open Mike, like, a person's name, or what?) with Richard Tucker at the Hole in the Wall. The Bang blow things up Friday and Saturday nights. Call 561-8445 to find out how to light your fuse. The main attraction at the Main Event tonight is the Shankleys. Bloodhound sniffs out the funk Friday night, and Saturday night Nero and Torrey do whatever it is they do. Call 681-2344 for information on cover charges and stuff like that.

Saving, as usual, the best for last, the Pearl gets bluesy woody Friday and Saturday nights with the Blue Monday Guys.

Shaq is Magic and the Heat strike gold with Miner

BY CHRIS PARKER
STAFF WRITER

It was an evening that went pretty much as expected at last night's NBA Draft in Portland, Ore. Orlando grabbed LSU's monster, franchise big-man, Shaquille O'Neal. The Charlotte Hornets scored Georgetown's 6-10 shot-blocker Alonzo Mourning, and Minnesota followed with Duke center Christian Laettner.

Dallas, which earlier traded guard Rolando Blackman to the Knicks for a 1995 first-round draft choice, grabbed Ohio State's versatile Jimmy Jackson, a 6-6 guard who makes things happen.

Denver and Washington followed with power forward Laphonso Ellis and North Carolina State forward Tom Gugliotta, respectively. Ellis' chiseled body (6-8, 240 pounds) made scouts salivate at pre-draft camps. And despite making headlines with his three-point touch, Gugliotta was the Atlantic Coast Conference's leading rebounder.

Milwaukee traded Larry Krystkowiak and Jay Humphries for Utah's first-round pick (23rd overall), Blue Edwards and Eric Murdock. The Bucks used their own pick, eighth overall, to snag 6-8 guard forward Todd Day. Later, with Utah's pick, they got Arkansas point guard Lee Mayberry.

Philadelphia chose Clarence Weatherspoon (6-5, 240). He's compared by many to the recently traded Charles Barkley. Atlanta followed by picking Adam Keefe of Stanford. Keefe is a 6-9 power forward who'll beef up the Hawks' frontline.

Houston made one of the first surprising picks, choosing Alabama's 6-8 Robert Horry, a player projected to go later in the first round. Miami added yet another guard to its backcourt by taking Harold Miner of USC. Adding an explosive scorer, the Miner-pick reignited rumors the Heat may be packaging a deal for Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon. Rumors have Rony Seikaly, Steve Smith and Willie Burton offered for Houston's disgruntled center.

Denver with their second pick of the first round tabbed Bryant Stith, a 6-5 guard from Virginia. Indiana followed with Malik Sealy a stringbean scorer from St. John's. The Lakers, in need of a marquee player, took athletic Anthony Peeler of Missouri, despite recent assault charges against him in Missouri.

The L.A. Clippers surprised everyone by taking small college star Randy Woods from LaSalle. A scorer and defensive stopper, Woods is only 6-0, 185 raising questions of how L.A. plans to use him. Seattle followed with 6-6 Doug Christie of Pepperdine. The health of his knees remains a question.

San Antonio scored junior Tracy Murray of UCLA. A high school Parade All-American, Murray's range could open up the inside for Spur center David Robinson. Detroit followed with UCLA teammate, Don MacLean. But he was then traded with

FSU Warthogs take their iceless hockey show to Great White North

BY BRIAN SCOTT

FLAMBEAU WRITER

Second-year pads, helmets and rollerblades, Florida State's roller hockey team rolled through its last practice Tuesday night before heading to Canada for an international tournament.

The FSU Warthogs fly to Buffalo, N.Y. this morning after an 800-mile trip to Toronto to arrive in time for their first game Friday night.

The Hogs are the only roller hockey team in the nation to represent a university, according to Roy Edmondson, the team founder. And they're raring to go.

Everyone this last whole week has been so excited it's just unbelievable. It's great to be able to go up there representing FSU," Edmondson said.

The Warthogs will be sending 13 members to Toronto to compete in the tournament. There will be 16 teams in the tournament, which lasts through the weekend. The Warthogs will be playing in the tournament opener against a team from New Brunswick.

The Warthogs leave for the Great White North with a 1-0 record, their only loss is against a Gainesville team.

Although they haven't faced any of the teams playing in the tournament, the team members say they aren't getting nervous.

"We expect to play very competitively up there. We might not win it all but we're going to get all out," said John Bowling, a defenseman.

Roller hockey is basically hockey played on roller skates instead of on skates, with a few differences.

"Only having four players besides the goalie really opens things up out there," said Edmondson. "Also there isn't any checking, but there is plenty of contact there. It's a lot harder to stop on blades than on skates."

Many of the Warthogs are hockey players searching for a fix of high-speed competition in sunny, iceless Tallahassee. They cite a number of reasons for coming out to play.

"It is very fast, and very physical. It's a great combination of finesse and rough edges," Bowling said.

The roller hockey club was conceived over a year and a half ago when Edmondson saw five people playing street hockey on campus and asked if he could join in. The resulting club, the Warthogs, now boasts 15 steady members, with up to 30 players attending any given practice.

The Warthogs practice at the Skate Inn East on Capital Circle. The members are mostly students, but players range in age from 18 to 52 and anyone interested in playing can show up with a set of blades, a stick, and some pads and try it out for $3.

The Hogs plan on playing throughout the summer and into the fall.

Warthog goalie Chris Darus and friends will head north today

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Today marks the beginning of a period of new emotional maturity and financial progress. Be aware that business success depends as much on the good will of others as it does on your own hard work. A self-disciplined approach will be handsomely rewarded in September. Although some long shots will pay off next winter, you would be wiser to stick to less spectacular investments. Marital differences fade early in 1993.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Carly Simon, director Sidney Lumet, TV host Phyllis George Brown, actress Barbara Montgomery.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An improvement in a financial situation boosts your productivity. Adopting a pragmatic approach brings the best results. Romance with a stranger could prove unwise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Give a major project your best shot. Distant or long-term matters may pose certain problems today. Act less judgmental. Be sure that your appearance and demeanor are first class.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The professional recognition you seek may elude you today but it is right around the corner. Dig in, work hard and wait for your just reward. Join in the fun and merriment tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A fresh start is needed. Be interested and interesting when talking to important people it could be your big chance for success. Do not be a bystander when the parade of creativity goes by.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are capable of intense love and devotion. Prudent parents will give these youngsters plenty of affection but not encourage an unhealthy dependency on Mom or Dad. These Cancerians have a strong sense of loyalty and family obligation. When the chips are down, count on them to rush to your side. Intellectually curious and persistent, these Cancerians are especially suited to the academic life. They make first-class teachers and researchers.

Agassi is a potty mouth

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

LONDON—Andre Agassi claimed Wednesday he is the victim of a personal vendetta by the supervisor of the Association of Tennis Players after being warned for swearing.

Agassi kept his cool Wednesday in beating Russian Andrei Chesnokov 5-7, 6-1, 7-5, 7-5 to advance to the third round of the $8.2 million Wimbledon Championships. The match had been resumed Wednesday after being suspended the day before because of darkness.

Agassi, the 12th seed, was warned during the match on Tuesday for "swearing."

He accused ATP supervisor Ken Farrar of making a "personal issue" of the incident.

"I am very frustrated and have made it very clear to the referee that I will be appealing," Agassi said. "I felt it was something of a personal issue with Ken Farrar."

William Bedford to the Clippers for Olden Polynice and two future second round choices. Questions persist about MacLean's speed and size but he's a stone cold scorer.

The Knicks drafted another guard in North Carolina's Hubert Davis. Boston followed with Jon Barry of Georgia Tech and Phoenix drafted Arkansas' Oliver Miller. Golden State chose Alabama defensive stopper Latrell Sprewell and the Clippers' second pick in the first was UNLV giant center Elmore Spencer (6-11, 290).

As for this year's championship teams, Portland chose 6-7 David Johnson of Syracuse and Chicago picked 6-4 Byron Houston of Oklahoma State.

Critics call Black scholar/student ratio unfair

BY MARK NESSMITH

SPORTS EDITOR

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part series.

The percentage of scholarship athletes at Florida State University who are Black is far greater than in the school's undergraduate racial composition. And critics say that disparity sends varied, often disturbing messages about the role of African-Americans at the university.

Charles Evans, president of the local chapter of the NAACP, said last week that FSU, like other white institutions, neglects the Black community's scholars while exploiting its athletes.

"The predominantly white institutions put more emphasis on what I classify as a true slave market by recruiting these athletes to make money for the university," said Evans, who is also a professor of business at Florida A&M University. "If (FSU) would turn it around and spend as much effort trying to develop and generate and give out scholarships to African-Americans, that would definitely enhance the overall society quite a bit."

Almost 36 percent of FSU scholarship athletes are Black. However, African-Americans account for just 7.1 percent of the school's undergraduate population. The numbers at FSU are comparable to those at the universities of Miami and Florida but are higher than the national average, according to a survey done by the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Reggie Dixon, an FSU graduate in business and former football player, said racial disparity played a role in the way he was treated by students as well as professors while he was a student at FSU.

"It affects anything that ever happens to you at Florida State, period," Dixon said. "Teachers talk to you differently. Students expect you to have the test. They honestly don't believe that a (Black) athlete can study."

In the recently published Lenny, Lefty and the Chancellor: The Len Bias Tragedy and the Search for Reform in Big-Time College Basketball, C. Fraser Smith writes about the difficulty the University of Maryland and other schools have in attracting Black scholars.

"Schools . . . could find basketball forwards across the country, but they had difficulty locating non-athlete black students in their own neighborhoods," wrote Smith.

One authority said the Black student/Black athlete statistics show that the priorities of FSU and other predominantly white schools have become skewed.

"It reflects a double standard in the fact that they will let more African-American students in as athletes

The reality budget will hurt FSU

BY GLEN TORBERT

ASST. NEWS EDITOR

A reality budget which would force new funding cuts would prove more damaging for Florida State University than temporarily having no budget at all, university officials say.

FSU President Dale Lick said Sunday if a reality budget with no new taxes is passed by the Legislature this week, it will mean "cutting some of the peripheral services and protecting the core of the university—academics and research."

The informational centers and institutes on campus, many of which receive state funding, provide various services to the state. But they would see equipment and travel funding slashed to virtually nothing with a reality budget.

However, even that won't be enough, Lick said.

"That would still mean we would have to let some people go," Lick said.

The Legislature has tried and failed to arrive at a budget package throughout this month's special session. Should the Legislature pass a reality budget with no new taxes as its final plan and override the veto promised by Gov. Lawton Chiles, FSU would have to begin cutting back and shutting down many of the services it provides to the state, according to FSU officials.

FSU Budget Director Ralph Alvarez said the exact cuts, including who is laid off, can't be determined until after a budget is finalized and he knows just how bad things are.

He added that some money would

Work-study programs unaffected by national trend

BY GLEN TORBERT

ASST. NEWS EDITOR

Even though work available to college students is going the way of eight track tapes in these recessionary times, officials overseeing the college work study programs at Florida State and Florida A&M universities say the poor economic climate hasn't changed the program's popularity or the number of students it serves.

Students have always clamored to get the college work study," Scott Hammond, Assistant Director for Student Financial Aid at FSU, said last week.

Work-study is a federal program included in a university's financial aid package that allows students to work part-time in tax free campus jobs. FSU offers the program in the fall and spring only.

Hammond, who has been either a student or administrator in the work study program off and on since 1978, said the program has seen changes, but not as a result of the current recession.

Hammond pointed out that many students in the program are paid minimum wage. And since minimum wage has gone up twice in the last two years, the amount of money available to pay work-study employees is effectively less.

Florida State has about 900 work study students and around $1.1 million budgeted to the program, according to Hammond.

The Chronicle of Higher Education reported in its June 10 edition on a national trend in which students take and keep work study positions more now than in previous years because of the dearth of jobs in the "real world."

A U.S. Department of Education official, who spoke under the department's policy of anonymity, said Tuesday in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C. that his research, albeit anecdotal, showed the Chronicle story was probably right.

But if that's true, the trend hasn't hit Tallahassee—at least not yet.

Woman stalked as she walks home

A 20-year-old woman walking home along Alabama Street early Sunday morning was confronted by a man offering a ride. Although she refused and the man left, he returned several more times threatening her with a gun, Tallahassee Police Department spokesperson Phil Kiracofe said.

The woman ran to a nearby yard and hid. She soon saw the man return and cruise the area slowly as he looked for her. He repeated this three or four times.

When the man returned the second time, the woman was walking south on Old Bainbridge Road. This time the man pulled out a gun and threatened to shoot the woman if she did not get into his car. The suspect was scared away when another car pulled up.

The woman ran to a nearby yard where she hid and saw the man pass by several more times.

The woman was finally able to slip away and get to her home on Macomb Street. She was not injured. The man was driving a maroon Oldsmobile or Buick four-door sedan.

Brick thrower mowed over

One of three men throwing bricks Sunday morning was struck by a car they were bombarding, Kiracofe said.

The driver started to flee the bricks then made a U-turn and drove toward one of them, striking him with the front of his car.

The incident, which police are calling a hit-and-run, happened at 7:08 a.m. Sunday. The driver of the car was described as a white male, 25 years old, six feet tall, weighing about 185 pounds. The blond-haired suspect was driving a burgundy four-door Volkswagen Rabbit.

The victim was taken to Tallahassee Memorial Regional Medical Center by ambulance. He is in stable condition. Police are investigating the incident.

You get what you pay for

A Tallahassee man robbed a female escort in his home Saturday evening after she refused to remove her clothing, Kiracofe said Sunday.

David Dudley Kern, 21, 2202 W. Pensacola St., called the Anything Goes Escort Service requesting an escort and the 19-year-old victim was sent.

When she arrived, Kern paid the $150 fee for a one hour date and told the woman to take off her clothes. The victim refused and Kern wrestled the money back from the victim.

Kerns was charged with strong arm robbery and was taken to the Leon County Jail. He was given pretrial release.

Man shot in gang attack

A man was shot in the thigh by a gang of men early Sunday morning on his way home from buying beer, Kiracofe said.

At 12:40 a.m., he was returning to his apartment on Allen Road from the convenience store and was surrounded by a group of young men. The suspect was then shot in the right thigh.

When the victim said he had no money, the suspects left. The victim was taken to TMRMC for his gunshot wound.

TPD soon will show its zeal on wheels

Policing by pedal.

That's the plan for the Tallahassee Police Department now that the Tallahassee City Commission has given its approval for a proposed bicycle patrol.

"It will be sort of like when you had the officers on foot patrol," said Garry Lassiter, of TPD's special operations division. "We'll have the close contact with the community with the added advantage of speed when it is needed."

The next three years will be building years for the patrol, said Lassiter. Money for the project, $65,483, will be taken from the Law Enforcement Trust Fund, which consists of money confiscated in drug arrests.

Tallahassee City Commissioner Steve Meisburg said Sunday he is very much in favor of the bike patrol.

"In the studies I've seen of other agencies in the nation using this type of bicycle patrol, they have all been positive," Meisburg said.

"This allows closer contact with the community without losing mobility," he added.

The initial plan is to have 20 bicycles. Each of the specially modified 21-speed mountain bikes will cost about $600. Training and equipment such as helmets, gloves, equipment bags, uniforms and a light-weight gun belt will bring the cost to about $5,000 per officer.

"This is a real good crime tool," Lassiter said.

Other cities have been using bike patrols for a number of years in high-crime areas and parks with great success, according to TPD.

"It has been a very useful tool against crime in Seattle and Orlando has also had a similar program," Lassiter said. "In those cities, relations between law enforcement and the community have improved; we hope for that."

"This agency is very much community oriented," he added.

Several TPD officers have submitted requests for transfer to the planned bike patrol and Lassiter said he hopes to have some officers trained and ready to go by the fall.

"We're not going to force any officers into the program," said Lassiter. "It's hot in the summer. It's hard work riding up and down those hills. We need to have officers who will enjoy riding bikes and want to be in close contact with the community."

Florida State University began patrolling by bicycle about two months ago, but a more in-depth project is expected for the fall. Plans have been made for FSU officers to train with TPD officers in about a month.

FSU Police spokesperson Jack Handley said they've had nothing but positive responses to their patrol.

"We have currently obtained three bicycles and we are in the process of gaining equipment for our officers," said Handley. "With the bicycles there is the potential for savings—savings on gas, on the cars and maintenance."

"This is a good idea," he said.

Lassiter expects officers on bicycles to answer the same calls as they would in a car and to take reports.

Civilian cyclists should also be wary of the new pedal patrol and adhere to traffic laws. Police expect to be able to ticket more bikers while they serve as good examples.

"Sometimes I've started to stop someone on a bike and by the time I get to them they've taken a turn and gone down a path or something," Lassiter said. "This way we can follow them."

TPD's Walter McNeil explained that a focus of the patrol will be community relations.

"There are plans for more parks in the area and with the ones we already have, bicycles can be of great use in policing those areas," McNeil said. "The Frenchtown and downtown areas in particular will also be well suited for this type of patrol."

teaching even without a budget, Lick said.

Combined with research involving contracts and grants, Lick said some 90 percent of FSU's staff would have to keep working. As for the other 10 percent, which range from groundskeepers to administrators, Lick's plan has them rotating in and out of work in an attempt to lessen the pain of the furloughs.

"We would have to all take turns being furloughed for a period of time, even the president," he said.

Neither event is especially likely. Lick said he expected a budget with at least $250 million in new revenue to pass, enough to avoid the cuts a reality budget would force.

Attempts to reach officials at Florida A&M University and the Board of Regents Friday were unsuccessful.

be saved through attrition.

The Panama City branch campus will remain open, Lick said, unless the Board of Regents orders all branch campuses closed.

If there is no budget by midnight June 30, the government officially shuts down except for "essential" services. But since the university is under contract for many of the services it provides, it will continue running at nearly full capacity.

"If a budget was not passed, the university would try to operate on a normal basis and hopefully everybody would get paid," Alvarez said.

Since students who are in school have basically contracted with the university for their classes, faculty are essential and will continue

Fight the good fight

Today begins the next and hopefully final round of the epic budget fight between Gov. Lawton Chiles and the Florida Legislature—and, we would add, the people of Florida.

Chiles enters the final round having won the previous one last week, when the Florida Senate upheld his justified veto of the pro-special interests, no-new-taxes budget.

The big question now is, will those publicity-battered Senate Republicans and the handful of Democrats who oppose Chiles' scaled-down tax reform budget plan have the good sense to throw the towel into the ring? Or will they instead fight on and risk sustaining permanent damage to the body politic?

For the sake of Florida's future, we sincerely hope it's the former. But to be quite frank about it, for now we see little reason for optimism. The Senate Republicans and others in the pocket of well-heeled special interests—who oppose any change in the status quo—don't appear to be in the mood to compromise. Far from it. They seem to be intent on calling Chiles' bluff to shut the state down.

The facts and figures speak for themselves. Chiles, rightfully in our view, insists on at least $400-500 million in new spending, while Senate Republicans insist they won't vote for anything over $240 million. Anything less and Chiles says he will let the state shut down. The worst case scenario is that Senate Republicans might well believe a shutdown will benefit them politically. Thus they would be inclined to not even meet Chiles halfway.

The dilemma all along has been that Chiles' so-called reality budget is dependent on the goodwill and support of many legislators who view reality through the eyes of lobbyists instead of those of the people of Florida. Thus the great resistance to tax reform, which in reality means that clients of these lobbyists would pay their fair share.

To his everlasting credit, Gov. Chiles has avoided the temptation to bend over backwards for the gaggle of special interests who usually get their way. On the whole, Chiles has stood up to the corrupt elements in the Legislature who would sacrifice the future of many for the benefit of a few. Despite those who pine for a Mussolini father figure such as Dempsey Barron to ride in on a white horse, cut backroom deals and get everyone home on time, Chiles has done the right thing in forcing the Legislature to face the economic reality it has so long avoided, as they are often too giddy from lobbyist perks to think straight.

For the sake of the people of this state who don't have high-priced lobbyists to make their case, we hope that Gov. Chiles delivers a knock-out punch to those obstructing even the meager reforms before them.

ALONG THE COLOR LINE Ross Perot is fast becoming our scary "political poster boy"

BY MANNING MARABLE
SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

In the past two months the American media has found a new political "poster boy," Ross Perot, the eccentric Texas billionaire. By any measure, he is a mass of contradictions and garbled homilies.

Perot never tires of denouncing federal deficits and big bureaucracies, yet he made his billions largely through massive federal subsidies. Back in 1987, he argued that tax hikes were necessary to balance the budget, but today he declares any talk of tax increases out of the question. Perot places himself on both sides of the abortion debate, declaring that he favors a woman's right to choose, yet he rejects the label of being "pro-abortion." Perot claims to favor the civil rights of all minorities, yet he would refuse to appoint homosexuals to certain government positions and would dismiss them from the military. He's an anti-Communist "patriot" who nevertheless opposed the Bush administration's murderous adventures in Iraq.

Despite these major inconsistencies in ideology and the lack of a coherent public policy program, Perot is currently ahead of both Bush and Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton. Reagan's 1984 campaign manager has just joined Perot's ranks, along with Hamilton Jordan, the architect of Jimmy Carter's presidential victory in 1976. The leading vice presidential candidate rumored with Perot is none other than Reagan's "Darth Vader" at the United Nations, former ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick. Yet the quixotic appeal of Perot extends to elements of the left. Jesse Jackson has told advisors that he feels a greater affinity for Perot than for Clinton.

What does the Perot phenomenon mean? Part of the reason that the Texas billionaire is riding high in public opinion polls is because neither Clinton nor Bush have captured the imagination or support of the American people. Many liberals and progressives question Clinton's lax attitude toward the environment during his tenure as Arkansas' Governor, his support for the death penalty and his generally conservative economic positions.

At a time when 37 million Americans lack medical coverage, Clinton's initiatives don't go far enough toward comprehensive health coverage for all. But by any comparison, Bush is inferior to Clinton in every possible way. The man elected by manipulating racist slogans and Willie Horton's image, the "environmental president" who just refused to sign a crucial environmental accord at the Rio earth summit, Bush has virtually nothing to offer most Americans. The only sector of the public that actually will gain from Bush's possible reelection is the one percent of all U.S. households worth more than 90 percent of all families.

Perot benefits from an American tradition of turning to military leaders and generals in times of crisis. A succession of presidents have been military leaders, beginning with George Washington and including Andrew Jackson, Zachary Taylor, U.S. Grant, Teddy Roosevelt and Dwight Eisenhower. With the end of the Cold War and the collapse of the Soviet Union, the political agenda shifted from foreign policy issues to domestic economic matters. With unemployment statistics still climbing despite a so-called recovery, with over one million bankruptcies this year alone, the middle class feels trapped and abandoned by those in power.

As dangerous and unpredictable as a Perot presidency might be, it also represents one positive factor—the long overdue breakdown and realignment of America's political system

Economically, American multinational corporations and huge banks feel no allegiance toward U.S. workers and communities, and are rapidly transferring billions of dollars from this country abroad. Smaller "national capital" firms, medium-sized corporations that operate solely inside the U.S., are sharply frustrated with both the Republicans and Democrats. Their leaders want a package of federal and private initiatives that revive domestic competitiveness, improve public education, and invest in the national infrastructure by building roads, sewage, public transportation and other resources. They are hostile toward unions, but favor a more liberal social policy than that championed by Bush and Quayle.

So from out of the west rides an "economic general," a "centrist" favoring entrepreneurial capitalism and social liberalism on many issues. The times seem to cry out for an "antipolitical politician," and Perot seems to fill the vacuum.

But as dangerous and unpredictable as a Perot presidency might be, it also represents one positive factor—the long overdue breakdown and realignment of America's political system. Perot may become the wedge that splits the two-party gridlock in electoral politics, inspiring other insurgent initiatives from local and state levels. A presidential election without a clear winner might radically change our system of politics.

Supporters laud outsider Perot

BY DAVE BRYAN

EDITOR

It isn't so much who H. Ross Perot is as who he is not. Frustrated with Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton, Republican candidate President George Bush and just plain politics in general, Randy Halfacre spent Saturday afternoon at the North Florida Fairgrounds showing support for the Texas billionaire and as yet undeclared presidential candidate.

"The majority of politicians, when they have to make a choice between their careers or America, they choose their careers," said Halfacre, an electrical engineer who recently graduated from Florida State University. "He hasn't made a life out of politics."

In an air-conditioned meeting hall massively adorned with red, white and blue bunting and various signs, some 250 Perot supporters showed up to rally in support of the former Electronic Data Systems owner and General Motors executive.

The word was out that Perot would declare his candidacy Saturday to coincide with the celebration of his 62nd birthday, but that declaration never came. Instead, Florida Perot Petition Committee organizers made do by turning the gathering into a Perot love fest.

Following a prayer by Rev. Olliver Simmons of Quincy's New Bethel AME church, a rendition of the national anthem by FSU music professor Roy Gelp, the pledge of allegiance, a rendition of Happy Birthday to You and a second prayer, Ed Hubbard, chief of the Florida campaign to put Perot in the White House, took center stage.

Hubbard, a veteran of the Vietnam conflict, told of his experiences as a prisoner of war and argued that Americans should support Perot because Perot has shown character similar to that of POWs.

Endurance is necessary for a successful campaign, Hubbard told the crowd composed partly of Perot coordinators and supporters from Leon, Wakulla, Liberty, Jefferson, Franklin, Taylor and Gadsden counties.

"The American people, given a common purpose, can accomplish amazing things," Hubbard told the overwhelmingly white, middle-aged crowd. "It's critical that we step up and get on the same team. We must elect Ross Perot President of the United States."

Jack Wolff, a state worker and Perot campaign organizer, agreed.

Wolff said he believes that since Perot is rich, he won't have to rely on special interests for campaign support, making Perot the ideal independent candidate.

"He can campaign his own way and he wouldn't be beholden to these special interests," Wolff said. "I just hope the majority of the people feel that way."

Many at the rally praised Perot's business acumen, saying Perot could be counted on to reduce the federal deficit, which currently registers in at more than $3 trillion.

"As a businessman he knows as much about that if not more (than other candidates)," said Sallie Hyslop, who was on hand selling $10 Perot for President T-shirts.

But Wolff summed up the overriding appeal of a Perot candidacy voiced by Saturday's supporters.

"We can't continue with Bush and Perot is the only one that can beat Bush," he said.

Black leaders, others meet today

BY JAY SCHROER

ASST. NEWS EDITOR

Airing a position that conflicts with Tallahassee city commissioners and some Black leaders, a newly formed Black community group says the controversial Lozano trial should be allowed to take place here.

The group includes the Rev. J. R. Harris, Shaheed Najm and Rashad Mujahid—the former and current Imams of the local Masjid-Al-Nahl mosque—as well as the student body presidents of Florida A&M University and Florida State University.

Many community leaders, both Black and white, agree that improving communication is important. And support appears to be citywide for the new Tallahassee Community Relations Council proposed by Police Chief Mel Tucker. But there are significant differences between minority leaders on some issues—differences the group hopes to air at a press conference today.

While the City Commission and the Ministers' Coalition for a Better Community oppose holding the retrial of Miami police officer William Lozano in Tallahassee, the new group does not.

Harris noted Sunday that the appeals court had overturned Lozano's original conviction on manslaughter charges because the Miami jury may have been pressured by fears an acquittal could trigger riots.

"To say send it back to Miami is ludicrous," he said.

Harris said fears of violence in Tallahassee have been exaggerated, and added Leon County's racial mix would enable a fair trial to be held.

"Due process doesn't stop at the Dade County line or the Leon County line," he said.

In a retrial scheduled to begin October 6, Lozano is charged with manslaughter in the deaths of a Black motorcyclist and his passenger in Miami's predominantly Black Overtown section in January 1989. The shooting incident and original trial led to violence in Miami.

The group also wants to address some "hard truths" on the issue of Black-on-Black crime, and the responsibility of the minority community in solving it.

"We're our own worst enemy," said Harris.

Najm said he believes the city is one of the best places in the country to live in, but added, "We're not naive enough to think there aren't any problems in Tallahassee."

By getting together to talk realistically, many issues can be solved before erupting into problems or violence, Najm said.

Work from page 1

The recession hasn't caused work study students to hang onto their jobs any longer than they normally would, said Jessica Jerger, coordinator of the work study program at FAMU.

"We've had basically the same number of students apply," she said. "Even in the past our students have always stayed with the program for the entire academic year."

The education department official said if FSU's and FAMU's work study programs have been maxed out for years, the effects of the recession wouldn't be felt here as they have in parts of the nation not already flooded with work study students.

Hammond acknowledged that FSU now has more students completing the work study program, but he doesn't think the recession is a factor. He attributes the trend to a hiring system introduced in 1990 that lets students pick their jobs. Before that, the jobs were chosen for the students, making it more likely for students to be unhappy with their positions.

"There are always a few students who drop out," he said. "We don't have a lot of that anymore because students are choosing their own jobs."

Sherry Burkes, a college work study program assistant at FSU, said that when students left the program for different jobs, it was often for reasons other than higher pay.

"I haven't seen any change really in how long a student keeps the job," she said last week. "A lot of students change more for experience than they do for money."

And students' stories agree with what administrators are saying.

Catherine Pelletier, an FSU junior music major, said Friday she received a loan and a grant as well as her work-study job in the School of Music last school year.

Pelletier said she was pleased with the way she could schedule her job around her classes and the fact that the job is tax-free.

"It's more flexible than a normal job," she said. "With this job, you get to set your own hours."

The only effect the recession has had on her, she added, was her inability to find another job over the summer at a location close enough to walk to, since she doesn't have a car.

Kimberly Burgess, an FSU junior communications major who works in the modern languages department, said Tuesday she went with the college work study program because if she worked at a regular job, her financial aid would be cut next year.

Because one of the factors in determining financial aid is how much money the student can provide, earnings from a regular job can lead the government to cut a student's aid package.

Both Pelletier and Burgess continue to work in their departments in OPS positions, and both plan to continue as work study participants this fall.

"I use all of it, up to the last quarter," Burgess said.

FSU prof claims discovery of Nino-like current off west coast

BY BRIAN SCOTT
FLAMBEAU WRITER

A Florida State University oceanography professor says he's discovered an uncharted ocean current which runs off the coast of California and is generated by the weather condition known as El Nino.

Using a supercomputer, Allen Clarke found evidence of a current hugging the California coast at a depth between 1,500 to 6,000 feet generated by El Nino. Clarke began running his model on the supercomputer six months ago.

"I didn't exactly know what the flow would look like, but I never expected to see a strong, organized current there," Clarke said Monday.

El Nino, Spanish for "The Child," is a term given to a period of time when subsurface ocean temperatures off the coast of South America are unusually high. Usually these temperatures return to normal, but every two to seven years the temperature does not decrease and devastating effects on weather, crops, and aquatic life follow.

The higher surface temperatures of El Nino weaken incoming tradewinds, which in turn effects rainfall patterns across the world. Also, the nutrient layer in the ocean drops deeper and plankton is unable to reproduce as effectively, leading to repercussions all the way up the food chain.

Clarke contends the reason his current had not been identified before rests in the difference between his scientific model of the continental shelf, the submerged shelf of land that slopes from the edge of continents, and earlier models. His model includes the effects on currents of the friction of running parallel the continental shelf.

"Other models have calculated the continental shelf as a straight vertical wall," he said. "By changing the model to include a sloping continental shelf, bottom friction was introduced into the model, which is a fundamental influence on ocean currents," said Clarke.

Clarke says he's positive the current exists. Armed with his new theory, he studied sea level fluctuations and subsurface temperatures from more than 80 years of readings. The data he collected matches behavior that would be explained by the presence of his current.

It is very likely that a fuller understanding of ocean currents will be needed before a complete explanation of the causes of an extended El Nino can be formulated, says FSU meteorology professor Eric Smith.

Proving that the current exists could take five years or longer, according to Clarke, because instruments must be in place while an El Nino is taking place.

But if he proves the existence of the current, it will be one of the few times a body of flowing water has been found through theory rather than physical evidence.

According to Clarke, understanding how currents interact with each other is essential to a complete grasp of how the ocean operates.

Allen Clarke
"I didn't exactly know what the flow would look like, but I never expected to see a strong, organized current there," Clarke said Monday.

Two quakes hit California Sunday

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

JOSHUA TREE, Calif.—A pair of severe earthquakes rumbled through Southern California early Sunday, crumbling buildings, buckling mountain roads and causing at least one death and more than 100 injuries.

Officials at Caltech Seismology Laboratory in Pasadena said the epicenter of the first quake, which measured 7.4 on the Richter scale, was between Joshua Tree and San Bernardino in a sparsely populated desert area about 130 miles east of Los Angeles. That area has had a series of aftershocks since a 6.1 temblor hit April 22.

Residents of the Los Angeles area were awakened by a big jolt followed by a 30-second rolling motion at 4:58 a.m. PDT. Hundreds of aftershocks rocked the area in the hours after the quake.

Another earthquake struck at 8:04 a.m. that seismologists said initially registered 7.0 on the quake-measuring scale but was later downgraded to 6.5. The second quake was not an aftershock of the first but rather a separate geological event, they said. It was located 6 miles south of Big Bear Lake.

Widespread Panic

Panic rages at the Moon tonight

BY MICK BUCHANAN
SPECIAL TO THE FLAMBEAU

It's been 20 years since the advent of Southern Rock, that musical genre best represented by the three-chord boogie blues as played by tousle-haired white boys. In those two decades, some big names (the Allman Brothers, Marshall Tucker Band, Elvin Bishop) have come and gone and come again in a sort of second wave of Southern Rock. Leading the way this time around is Widespread Panic, a sextet from Athens, Ga., ironically—and appropriately—the first band to be signed to the recently resurrected Capricorn Records, home label to the leaders of the genre (the Allmans, Wet Willie, Marshall Tucker, Elvin Bishop).

Widespread Panic, who play at the Moon tonight, sounds like a wholesale merging of the Allman Brothers and the Grateful Dead, a sort of free-for-all extended improvisational jam band. They have a penchant for eclectic mixtures, as evidenced by their version of Robert Johnson's "Me And The Devil Blues" with the Talking Heads "Heaven."

The band traces its roots to 1981, when vocalists/guitarists John Bell and Michael Houser were students at the University of Georgia in Athens and played together as a duo at local coffeeshouses. They expanded to a trio with the addition of bassist David Schools. Rounding out to full-fledged band status with the addition of drummer Todd Nance, the band released their first LP, Space Wrangler, in 1987 on Landslide Records, after which they expanded their sound further with the addition of percussionist Domingo S. Ortiz.

In 1991, the band was signed to Capricorn Records and released their self-titled debut LP, after which they recruited former Dixie Dregs keyboard wizard T. Lavitz. Lavitz subsequently left to join the re-formed Dregs and was replaced by Jo Jo Herman.

Widespread Panic hits the Moon tonight in an 18-plus show sponsored by Student Campus Entertainment. Admission is free for Florida State students with validated IDs, $3 for those 21 and older without IDs, $5 for the 18-20 year olds. Doors open at 8 and the show starts at 9.

KAPLAN MCAT PREP

Think of it as CROSS-TRAINING for the MIND

.....

The principle: the more ways you have of learning something, the better you'll understand it. Academic types call this "multi-modal learning." At Kaplan Test Prep, we call it cross training for the mind.

At Kaplan, we integrate more different learning approaches than any other program. When you train for the MCAT with us, you'll have access to live classes, audio reinforcements, academic and strategy clinics, home study notes and individual tutoring.

You'll take practice tests that run the gamut from topic drills to full-length released exams, from taped self-tests to a simulated MCAT.

With this kind of training, no wonder Kaplan produces more top MCAT scores and prepares more med school candidates than all other courses combined.

Poetry for the masses and fiction full of affectionate chaos at Grand Finale

BY DARRYL DOCKSTADER
STAFF WRITER

Two award-winning writers grace the stage at the Grand Finale Tuesday night in this week's installment of the Florida State English Department Summer 1992 Readings series.

Greg Byrd, who received his bachelor's degree in creative writing from Eckerd College and his master's in the same area from FSU, won the Ann Durham Award from FSU's English Department for his creative master's thesis. He currently resides in St. Petersburg, where he writes and teaches creative writing at St. Petersburg Junior College.

Byrd focuses his writing on poetry and cites Robert Frost, Richard Wilbur, Theodore Rothke and Peter Meinke—with whom he worked at Eckerd College—as being among his influences.

Byrd will read a selection of poems ranging in topic from historical events to issues about his father. He describes his writing as "simple without being simplistic," and tries to make his work accessible to a broad audience.

"Peter Meinke once said something to me about audience," Byrd said in an interview last week. "He said he wants to write poems that are simple enough for his parents to understand, but are still really strong. I guess I feel that way, too. I'm not trying to write overly academic stuff, but poems that carpenters and plumbers will understand. That's sort of my background—my dad owned an appliance business."

Joining Byrd will be another writer whose master's creative thesis won the Ann Durham Award. Lu Vickers is also the winner of the Florida Grant for Writers. An excerpt of her fiction appeared in the grant's publication of guidelines as an example of award-winning caliber writing.

"Vickers captures that sort of weird world of Panama City, where the inland, farmer North Florida mentality crashes against the sea," said creative writing professor Jerome Stern last week. "You get that bizarre, carnal atmosphere that has a potential for love and violence. Lately, she's been doing some young characters. They have an initiation into a world where the parents are delinquent and the children are trying to sort out what they are going to be. She interweaves a sense of affectionate chaos into the stories, so you never know how things are going to come out. And the thing is, they're funny."

Vickers currently teaches full time at Tallahassee Community College and is working on her Ph.D. in creative writing at FSU.

Greg Byrd and Lu Vickers go word-up at the Grand Finale Tuesday night at 8. It'll be as fresh and free as a sea breeze.

ARTS BRIEFS

John Robertson, a local music promoter for Redrum Productions, has struck a deal with the Late Night Library to have live music featured every other Wednesday night. The series kicks off this Wednesday, July 1, with local rockers Snidely Whiplash and Trash Palace. As an added bonus, Z-Rock (Z-106) will co-sponsor and do a live remote. For more information, call the Library at 224-2429.

Student Campus Entertainment brings you Comedy Night featuring David Sayh and student comedians Wednesday night at the Club Downunder. The show begins at 9:30 and is free for all.

HOROSCOPE

Jean Dixon's

MONDAY, JUNE 29, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE:
Attention to detail is vital to the success of a promising project.
Firm up new business plans with key associates. Going back to school in the fall will boost your earning potential. Be on the lookout for a golden employment opportunity.
In December, a family reunion leads to an overdue reconciliation. Assess your investment portfolio early in 1993. A romantic relationship will blossom beautifully next April.
Wedding bells could ring out in early summer.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Gary Bussey, slugger
Harmon Killebrew, actress Ruth Warrick, sportscaster Dan Dierdorf.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Pay little or no heed to those who want you to believe their schemes will pay you dividends. You could lose more than you gain. Read contracts carefully before signing them.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A long-standing friendship could be in jeopardy unless you change some of your ways. A self-improvement program enhances your image. A financial settlement is due.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Others try to influence you, sometimes for the wrong reason. You can gain control of your life by setting your own goals. Recent efforts pay off.
Stay put if a new job is offered.

CANCER (June 21-July 22):
Lasting benefits could develop as a result of what you say today. Your energy level is high. Step up the pace at work! Greater productivity is the key to a better salary.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your enterprising ways bring in much-needed cash. A busy social life is appealing but should not be allowed to interfere with career progress. Focus on projects that will fatten your bank account.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A threat to your emotional or intellectual interests can be checked by adopting a firm stand.
Drop your own projects and come to partners rescue. Service and dedication are twin assets.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Something comes to a highly beneficial conclusion as far as you are concerned. Your health and diet demand new attention. A calm attitude is your best defense against rising tension.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Think of the future before you start taking chances that may nullify all you have won. Trying to force opinions on your co-workers will backfire. Learn to go with the flow.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21):
Experiment with a new line of thinking.
Keep your domestic life safe from upsetting influences. Overseas contacts bring you good luck, new business results.
Romance deepens.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An ultimatum forces you to weigh your options. Consult experts while considering your position. Although legal matters can be complicated, you will get through them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look forward to a time of regeneration for your relationships as well as a business. Travel is expensive but worthwhile. Check out the possibility of marketing a favorite product or hobby.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Dealing directly with top officials will help you achieve your goals sooner. It is also the best way to resolve a dispute. A promotion or raise is possible if you redouble your efforts.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are home-loving, generous and intuitive. Their sixth sense tells them what people want, their eagerness to be liked makes them try to supply it! They enjoy playing with their siblings and will choose their confidants from within the family circle. A tendency to procrastinate is all that could stand between these Cancerians and tremendous success. Some wonderful opportunities may be lost unless timely action is taken.

Athletes from page 1

who have decidedly lower academic performance than they will (non athletes) who might have similar kinds of academic profiles," said Israel Tribble, president of the Florida Endowment Fund for Higher Education and former vice chancellor of the Board of Regents.

FSU President Dale Lick disagreed with that assessment. "I think that some people would believe that maybe it shows the opposite, that we're working hard to give minorities opportunities to excel in whatever area they can excel," Lick said. "We don't discourage academic excellence with minorities."

Pete Ripley, a professor of history at FSU, said the fact that Florida State and other major universities field a higher percentage of Black athletes than non athletes stems from more general American societal values.

"This is a country that's basically anti-intellectual," Ripley said. "And, across the board, it supports the belief that athletics ... is a more preferable route to success than education and scholarship."

Former FSU track athlete Billy Close, now a graduate student and Black studies research assistant, agreed.

"(The disparity) may point in some part to the university's commitment but it also points to the message that society gives," he said, adding that superstars like Michael Jordan and Magic Johnson are constantly portrayed as role models solely because of their athletic accomplishments.

"That doesn't take the university off the hook but it does point out that it's a problem that extends beyond just the university," Close said.

Smith wrote that there are "plenty of athletic role models, but not enough spokesmen for racial equality."

Ahli Moore, president of FSU's Black Student Union, said that FSU recruits top Black athletes because they bring exposure, and therefore money, to the university.

"I call FSU a place of higher education ... but we have to be realistic when we discuss Division I schools. They're still business places and they have to make money," Moore said.

Israel Tribble

"And, if anyone says that [FSU administration] don't realize that, they're totally lost."

"You can say it's wrong, you can say it's right ... but that's the way it is," he added.

The NAACP's Evans said recruiting talented athletes is especially a priority in high profile sports.

"The football and basketball teams are money makers and there are some superb Black athletes out there," he said. "So they are buying what I classify as good ol' slave labor, which means that they're buying individuals at a very inexpensive rate to play ... for four years."

Current University of Georgia basketball coach Hugh Durham coached the first integrated team at FSU in the late 1960s. He attributes FSU's high percentage of Black athletes to African American socio-economics.

"The reason that you have 30 to 40 percent ... Black athletes, as opposed to 6 or 7 percent in the student body as a whole, is that the athletes don't have to pay (for school)," Durham said in a phone interview from Athens, Ga. "I think it's economics."

Critics have charged that by bending admissions standards for athletes—in this case, Black athletes—FSU and other Division I schools tell the African-American community that its young athletes are more valuable than its scholars.

But Lick said exceptions to admissions policies are in fact a valid way to bring in student athletes.

"Most universities look for giftedness, then you can balance that off with a lesser level of something else. One of those gifts is athletics," he said. "We do this not just in athletics, we do this in other areas as well."

In Lenny, Lefty and the Chancellor, Smith argues that schools which enroll substandard student-athletes eventually pay a price.

"Ill-concealed interest in winning led directly to the recruiting of illiterates ... and to the development of cynical and sometimes unhappy young men," Smith wrote in his chapter "Basketball Uber Alles."

The BSU's Moore, however, said he feels enrolling academically suspect student athletes is an economic necessity.

"(Universities) are trying to make money," Moore said. "And if their priorities are mixed up to the point that they let some student (athletes) in who really shouldn't be here, that's just the way it is."

Tribble, whose Florida Endowment Fund coordinates programs that help African-Americans attend college, said enrolling a significantly higher percentage of Black athletes than non-athletes perpetuates damaging myths.

"It continues to reinforce certain types of stereotypes that are unfair and damaging: 'all brawn and no brains' (they have natural ability but no cognitive ability)," he said.

But FSU President Lick said increased minimum academic standards such as the NCAA's Proposition 48 should drop such stereotypes. Prop 48 requires prep athletes to have a 2.0 average in 11 core courses or a 700 SAT score.

"When Prop 48 went into place people said, 'Well, you're going to lose all those really great athletes who don't make a high enough score.' That just didn't happen," he said. "That probably hasn't changed the mix of Blacks and whites in athletics."

"Students who are admitted to an institution of higher education are real students, people who have a chance of success in college," Lick said.

Tribble said the disparity between Black students and Black student-athletes stems from FSU's minority recruitment.

"It's a matter of making a commitment and doing the same things for students who might have some weaknesses in their academic profile," he said. "You provide the support services ... and the like and you find out you do pretty doggone well."

"(FSU) is one of the better institutions in the country in terms of the production of baccalaureate degrees for African-Americans," Tribble said. "All I'm saying is that that disparity should not be as great."

Assistant FSU football coach John Eason said the difference in Black athletes and students isn't a result of FSU's lack of commitment but of the inflexibility standardized tests bring to the admissions process.

"Because someone does not do well on a test does not mean they're going to be a failure in college," Eason said, noting the academic success of football/basketball star Charlie Ward, who delayed enrollment a year until achieving the required test score.

Ward, now student government vice-president, has better than a B average in his major.

Ripley stressed that the situation at FSU only mirrors society.

"I don't want to single out Florida State as being an arch-villain in this," Ripley said. "But the idea that athletics is the premiere pathway to success is a destructive image for all kids. To the extent that it's disproportionately Black, it's more destructive to the Black community."

USA proves winning isn't everything—winning big is

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

PORTLAND, Ore.—The vaunted U.S. men's Olympic basketball team made a thunderous debut Sunday, blasting Cuba 136-57 in its opening game of the Tournament of the Americas qualifying event.

The 79-point margin of victory topped the biggest Olympic rout—a 101-29 victory over Thailand at the 1956 Melbourne Games. The 136 points broke a U.S. Olympic team record, a mark set when the 1960 team beat Japan 125-66.

The so-called Dream Team, loaded with the NBA's best, turned the game into a nightmare within minutes for the Cubans. The Americans led 67-27 at the 20-minute half.

The game amounted to less than a workout for the United States, which shot 72 percent from the floor and applied fierce defensive pressure on a Cuban squad woefully ill equipped for such a test. Clyde Drexler punctuated the victory with a dunk at the buzzer, creating the record victory margin.

Charles Barkley scored 22 points to lead seven U.S. players in double figures. Drexler added 20 points, Larry Bird 17, Karl Malone 16, Chris Mullin and David Robinson 12 each and John Stockton 10 plus 12 assists.

The only U.S. player who didn't make at least half his shots was Michael Jordan. He played 21 minutes and made 2 of 6 shots (0 of 3 from 3-point range) for 6 points.

Magic Johnson, inactive since the NBA All-Star game in February, had nine assists. He was the team's low scorer with 4 points, even though he started and played 21 minutes.

No one played more than Barkley's 22 minutes. Christian Laettner had the lead amount of time with 10 minutes. Laettner, the only college player on the team, scored 9 points.

The Americans played without starting center Patrick Ewing, who dislocated his thumb Thursday and is to miss a few more.
